Grandee leads Europhile backlash

Howe attacks 'damaging' Tory advert

By Philip Webster, political editor

LORD Howe of Aberayon, the former Conservative Foreign Secretary, led a fierce pro-European backlash last night against the Tory advertise-ment depicting Tony Blair as a ventriloquist's dummy on the knee of Helmut Kohl, the German Chancellor. Lord Howe, one of John Major's strongest supporters in his battle with the Eurorebels, spoke of his disappointment that the Prime Minister should have "gone against his natural instincts" to defend something that could damage Britain's relations with the European Union. He told The Times that on Wednesday Mr Major had shown his wisdom and experience as a leader by his passionate defence of the negointe-and-decide policy on the single currency. He had shown that he was prepared to put the nation before his party," Lord Howe said.

By allowing the use of the advertisement, and delending it yesterday, Mr Major had risked damaging the partnership with Germany that Britain would need in the future as it did in the past. "It is disappointing that John Ma-jor should be obliged by people who would put party before nation to defend something of that kind which is inconsistent with his own position as presented on

Lord Howe called on the party not to use the advertisement again, as the Advertising Standards Authority said it would look into complaints lodged against it. The German Government refused to be drawn, but politicians and diplomats attacked the adver-

Iron Men of Europe? The decision of Lord Howe to go public with his misgivings in the middle of the election campaign was a clear indication of the dismay felt by the pro-European minority in the Tory party over events this week as the single currency revolt has run out of control, and over the advertisement.

Although it has been planned for about a week, its use was brought forward by Tory strategists after Mr Major decided on Wednesday to make Europe the "central issue" of the campaign. It was decided at Ilam on Thursday to run the advertisements.

Church goes to battle over craze for exotic weddings

BY RUTH GLEDHILL RELIGION CORRESPONDENT AND DAREH GREGORIAN

FIGHTING back against the fashion for unconventional wedding ceremonies, the Church of England is to review the medieval requirement that one of a couple must live in a parish before they can have a church wedding

there. Parishes say church weddings are declining as more couples take advantage of the marriage law passed two years ago that allows them to marry in 1,500 newly licensed venues. ranging from beach roller coasters and football grounds to pubs and castles. Some clergy have caused couples distress by strictly interpreting the rules. Others, particularly at fashionable London and pretty countryside churches, have been more flexible in helping couples to find ways around the restrictions. The Rev Roger Ryan. Vicar of St

Mary's in Summerstown, southwest London, said the number of weddings at his church had fallen to two or three a year from five or six in 1988. Unconventional ceremonies were at-two recipients. There are no plans to change the vetting of donors. Since the system was set up 30 million "pints" have been given and used and this is the anything has gone wrong. There was a similar incident in 1986 in Scotland. Dr Angela Robinson, medical director of the service, said: "Patients can be reassured that blood transfusion in this country is among the safest in the world. I can reassure everyone that no one else is at risk from this event.

Screening involves each donor being interviewed every time blood is given. The interview takes about six minutes and includes asking straightforward, relevant details of lifestyle. Once blood is taken, it is tested for HIV, hepatitis B and C and syphilis.

Even though the blood is donated, collecting and testing mean every "pint" costs about £40. The platelets component lasts for less than a week so it is impossible to wait for 30 days before using it.

Lady Thatcher runs out of credit

Wine Cream paté - British. Lady Thatcher then requested a surprisingly large slice of Quiche Lorraine - doubtless under the impression that Lorraine was the Essex girl who made it, rather than a place in France.

We made for the beel. "I bought this," she declared, brandishing a bloody piece of Scottish rump, "because it's £1.50 off." A tub of Tesco's own-brand strawberry yoghurt was chosen. Cress and Essex lettuce were tossed into the basket. Battered cod was rejected in favour of Tesco's own-brand British bacon, as the Baroness made for the checkout counter. to ripples of applause and admiration.

Lady Thatcher took this as a call for an encore. Breaking from her arranged plan, she decided to do a reprise shop: a quick twirl through the fruit and vegetables again, bringing tomatoes and conference pears to the basket. Her detective looked resigned to the possibility that she would now go shopping all over again, but the Baroness was headed off by the soft toiletries and diverted to counter 19.

Ah. fateful day for Shirley Taylor! Looking only slightly tense, the operative at counter 19 did everything right. Each purchase was rung on the till, and Shirley remembered to offer her Special Customer a Tesco Clubcard, which the Baroness, unconvinced, signed and popped into her handbag. Then she took out her Midland chequebook. The till said £21.44, a sum Shirley Taylor will never lorget.

"And your cheque guarantee card?" she asked the Baroness pleasantly.
Lady Thatcher looked blank. Panic

entered the eyes of her staff, Lady Thatcher, suddenly shaky, offered Shirley the Clubcard she had just been given. "No, a cheque guarantee card," said

Shirley, firmly but politely. "It's an awful nuisance, but it's the rules. I can't put it through without it."

Disbelieve me if you like, but it looked as though Lady Thatcher did not know what a cheque guarantee card was. Plastic has not entered this Baroness's life. A minder said, desperately, to Shirley promise you there won't be any problems," but Shirley knew the rules.

"Well, I'll have to go round putting everything back," said Lady Thatcher. Tesco executives grouned inwardly. Then, recovering herself, and in Lady Bracknell tones, the Baroness declared: Something will have to be done!"

But what? Ah, cash! She opened a purse, It contained £25 and no cards. Shirley Taylor's relief was palpable. Panic over. They presented Lady Thatcher with flowers. She presented her shopping to a minder, and swept away, to appliause.

Youths weep at long sentences for rape of tourist

'You showed no mercy: she showed immense courage'

By Lin Jenkins

SEVEN youths who subjected an Austrian tourist to a "wicked, violent and prolonged" gang rape and threw her in a canal to drown were sentenced to between 10 and 12 years' detention yesterday.

The youths, two of whom were 14 when they subjected the woman to the hour-long attack, showed no emotion as they appeared for sentence. Minutes later they were sob-bing in the Old Bailey's cell area, shocked by the severity of the sentences. The Recorder of London, Sir Lawrence Verney, said the sentences would have been more severe had they been aged over 21. He told them: "This case of rape is as horrifying and revolting as any could be. It contains aggravated features exceptional wickedness which merit exceptional sentences that combine punishment with a clear warning to any others who may contemplate similar conduct.

He added that a particularly offensive aspect of the rape had been the racial element. As they held their victim head high and ripped her clothes off, one shouted: The white bitch." It was, said the judge, "a further disgraceful factor in the canal when she told them your dreadful conduct".

The judge praised the 33year-old victim for her bravery in surviving the appalling attack and reliving events in court. "The victim showed immense courage and selfpossession, while her dreadful experience continued. Somehow she managed to isolate herself mentally from what was going on. # Gang's violent games captured on arcade video

IN A chilling echo of the night they brutally raped the Austrian tourist, the gang responsible — while on bail last week - were again thrown out of the amusement areade where they plotted their attack.

Their violent horseplay in the smokey downstairs pool hall at King's Cross was captured on seeurity video cameras. They were ejected and again the police were called. Fortunately they split up and The Austrian woman recalled later that they seemed "only babies". But the gang of misfit secondgeneration immigrants were hardened to life on the streets, and to persistent crime to fund their drug bail for mugging and all focused their frustration at their futile lives on white people.

The gang met regularly at the Family Leisure Amusement arcade opposite King's Cross station. Each bore a cigarette burn marked deep between thumb and forefinger as a sign of their brotherhood. They shared backgrounds of broken homes, truancy and expulsion from school, and trouble with the police.

The ringleader was three months past his fourteenth birthday when he walked out of Beatrice House, a privately run children's home in Finsbury Park, north London, to roam the streets until the early hours, as he often did. He had been expelled from Holloway Boys School, where three others of the nurse, lost control of him after her marriage to a Manchester-born British Rail worker collapsed eight years ago and she developed multiple sclerosis. Once he was a promising basketball player. Now he is, in the minds of police and social workers. out of control and destined for a life of violent crime. Cesare Cardenas, 14, the most aggressive of the attackers, came to Britain from Columbia with his parents and two sisters in 1986 and lives with them in a three-bedroom flat in Clerkenweil. The week before the rape he was expelled from Holloway Boys School for robbing a fellow pupil at knifepoint. He had earlier been in trouble for bullying.

Cardenas would spend his nights roaming the streets, drinking cans of beer and smoking cannabis, mug-ging for the cash to buy the Pierre Cardin, Adidas and Nike clothing that is the hallmark of the gang.

Brothers Eduardo, 16, and Allan Agum, 15, live some distance away from the rest of the gang in Hackney with their Filipino mother, other brother and two sisters. The brothers' command of English is so poor that they can barely make themselves understood.

Nicholas Mavrides, 16, whose Greek-Cypriot father is estranged from his mother, is blamed by the others for them getting caught. He alone had a conscience about the appalling crime and woke on the Saturday morning to tell his mother there had been a rape,

Another 17-year-old member of the gang, who cannot be named for legal immigrant from Venezuela, and sister in Clerkenwell, but is supported by his father, a builder from the Dominican Republic Neighhours say she is a deeply religious woman who cannot understand how her son became involved with such a gang.

The eldest of the gang, aged 18, never had a job and his name would crop up whenever police investigated some of the most vicious crimes in the area. He lived with his Afro-Carribean mother in a new council house near the station. He was of very low intelligence.

The last member of the group, aged 15, lives beyond the control of his single mother in one of London's most abject council estates in Islington. Police said he found the vicious rape a subject for hilarity.

But having rejected his wife after the attack, telling her she must deal with it on her own, he is responsible for the split. His reaction was to tell her to take a bath. When she walked out, he shouted: "Why don't you go back to England so you can get raped again?"

His 33-year-old former wife had not telephoned from London to tell him about the attack because she knew he would think it her fault, knew in her heart that the marriage would not survive. #### Undercover soldier who shot at rat is cleared

By MICHAEL EVANS

A SOLDIER who shot at a rat with his 9mm Browning pistol during an undercover operation in Hong Kong was cleared of all charges at his court martial yesterday.

Steven Leech, 27, a corporal in the Royal Marines, had been accused of neglecting his duties as commander of the covert unit which had been in the New Territories in Hong Kong monitoring a suspected Triad gang allegedly smuggling stolen luxury cars to The prosecution at his four-day court martial in Portsmouth had claimed that his attempt to shoot the rat, which had been annoying him and his team of three, had jeopardised the operation. Corporal Leech said that he did not believe the sound of the gunshot had blown their cover. He said he shot the rat after being told about horrific diseases that the rodents carried.

Corporal Leech, from Hull, was cleared of two charges. including failing to report the shooting to his superiors.

Golf club ends up in bunker over raffle

BY AUDREY MAGEE

A PLAN by a golf club to oust a member who refused to pay a fine backfired when a judge ordered the club to turf out a further 50 members who had not paid their dues. The club is also in danger of losing 200 members who lagged behind in their subscriptions.

The Loughrea Golf Club in the West of Ireland enlisted the help of Gerard Gately, a long-standing member, to sell raffle tickets to raise funds to extend the nine-hole golf course. Mr Gately and his wife agreed to sell nine £100 tickets. But Mr Gately failed to receive all the money from the last ticket he sold in time for the draw because the closing date was brought forward. He was fined £30 by the club. He refused to pay and was thrown out.

He said: "There were a lot of people who paid the fines but I couldn't on principle. I have been a member of that diub since 1977. I won competitions for the club and my picture is still hanging on the wall of the clubhouse."

Mr Gately demanded reinstatement and initiated legal proceedings in 1991. In the judgment, handed down this week in Loughrea Circuit Court, Judge Harvey Kenny demanded that the "zero tolerance" attitude displayed towards Mr Gately should be extended to all members. He ordered that "in the interests of fair play" the trustees should kick out the 50 members who had not settled their membership fees. The judge was told the closing date for membership fees was April I. But club documentation shows that the official closing date for mem-

The club, which has 580 members, raised £100,000 through the draw and has started to develop the 18-hole course. But the treatment of Mr Gately has left a bitter taste. Operation at home may ease fears over bone-marrow donation

Sister to rethink vital surgery

By Russell Jenkins

THE sister of a woman dying from leukaemia yesterday promised to reconsider her refusal to donate bone marrow for a vital operation.

Angela Latham. 34, from

Blackpool, Lancashire, needs the surgery to have any chance of beating the disease but her sister — the only perfect tissue match — had refused because she is terrified of hospitals.

The pleas of Mrs Latham's family and her hospital specialists were answered when Susan Squires, 39, promised in an emotional meeting with Mrs Latham's husband, Paul, to rethink her decision and hinted that, if the surgery could be performed in her home, that she would change

Mr Latham then returned to his home 500 yards away to tell his wife that the answer was "rather more a yes than a no". It was the most heartening news for the couple in three years and may signal an end to a bitter family feud.

Mrs Latham, the mother of Ashley, 12, and Bernadette, 6, said she would give her sister a big hug when she next saw her and "get back to being a family again". "It is a relief to know that she is thinking about the operation." Mrs Latham said.

"How can you hate your own flesh and blood? I have never hated her. Hopefully she will save my life now she knows she does not have to go to hospital. It [Mrs Latham's illness] hit everyone in the family hard and unfortunately her reaction has been the hardest. I do feel sympathy for her. With her being flesh and blood you would not have thought she would turn me down but I don't hate her."

Mrs Latham is undergoing drug therapy after a course of chemotherapy failed to stem the spread of the disease, diagnosed in August 1994. For three years she and her sister, once good friends, have barely spoken. Miss Squires, who has a daughter aged 16, went for a blood test at Blackpool's Victoria Hospital, where her sister is being treated, discovered she was a perfect match but then refused to go ahead with what surgeons claim is a relatively simple, and minimally painful, operation under local anaesthetic to extract bone marrow.

Mrs Latham went to the media to publicise her plight earlier this week as a "last throw of the dice". Paul Latham went to see his sister-in-law to make a final appeal. He found her in a highly emotional state.

"We are all talking again," Mr Latham said. "She is shaking in there. She is crying her eyes out. She is suffering. When I told her she would not have to go into hospital there was a glint in her eye. You could tell that made her feel a little bit better."

Mrs Latham said: "Hopefully she won" turn me down but, if she does, then I have tried everything I possibly

Mrs Latham said if her sister decided against the operation, she would respect that decision. "We would stay sisters but I would hope to God she does not decide that way."

By KATHRYN KNIGHT

A GIRL aged 14 wept yesterday as she described how her boyfriend had sacrificed his life to push her out the path of a car. Laura Gledhill said that Paul Broughton, 16, had taken the full impact of the collision as they crossed the road and was thrown into the path of a second car. He died of heart failure in hospital.

"Paul saved my life. He was a hero, I owe my life to him."

Earlier this week Chris Dorries, the Sheffield coroner, recorded a verdict of accidental death on Paul, who died in November last year.

Laura said yesterday that they had been seeing friends and had caught the bus to their homes in Monk Bretton, Barnsley. As they crossed the road, a Volvo had appeared around a bend.

Paul, a keen Manchester United supporter, was training as a construction worker at Barnsley College. He was burled in his footboal kit.

His father. Alan Broughton, 47, said: "I'm so proud of what he did and the boy he was. He was one in a million and we miss him so much. He was trying to protect Laura. He had told us that he loved her very much and I have no doubt their relationship would have developed."

teaching and improved staff to pupil ratio.

He plans to vote Labour. "Their heart's in the right place. I feel the Tories are not interested in anything but the education of the elitist few. The majority of pupils are treated pretty shabbily."
Ironically, however, he supports the Conservatives' assisted places scheme. Writing in The Mail on Sunday last December he recalled how. like his brother and sister, he won a scholarship to Stamford School in Lincolnshire. "We were poor but my parents saw education as a privilege which they had been denied and which they were determined we would receive . . . We were conscious that we were privileged," he wrote.

Particularly those of us who had been admitted to Stamford through scholarships and yet sat alongside feepaying pupils. We were not joining a social elite; we were simply being given a chance to learn and exploit our talents." He was concerned that ending the scholarships could prevent realising their potential.

Although the latest series of Morse topped the ratings with 18 million viewers, Mr Dexter. 67, said: "We can all do with a pat on the back." He spoke of the thrill of being associated with previous winners such as P. D. James and Ruth Rendell. Gold and silver daggers have been awarded to outstanding writers since 1986 by The Crime Writers' Association, established in 1953 to promote "the highest standards in crime writing".

Mr Dexter will not be keeping his trophy at his home in Oxford: it is made by the jewellers Cartier of gold and silver with a large ruby cabo-chon surrounded by dia-monds. "No one would dare keep it. It would put up your household insurance."

He said he did not plan another book. "I've murdered enough people," he said, joking about having made Oxford the murder capital of Europe.

☐ However, the plot thickened. John Thaw, who plays Inspector Morse, said "a little bird tells me he is actually in the middle of another book". Thaw began filming yesterday for the "last" episode of Morse, based on Dexter's novel Death is now my Neighbour. The two-hour episode, which solves the mystery of Morse's Christian name, Endeavour, will be shown in November.

Hot weather speeds strawberry crop

By Michael Hornsby, agriculture correspondent

THE first British strawberries may be in the shops within two weeks, a full month earlier than usual, thanks to the warm spring.

Growers expect one of the biggest and earliest crops in recent years. They say the strong sunlight should enhance the volume and flavour of the strawberries.

Bill Hamilton, director of public affairs at the Safeway supermarket chain, said: "We expect to see some very competitive pricing. About the only thing that could go wrong now would be late frost at the end of this month or early in May." Price should be well below the level of £1.49 reached at the height of seasonal demand last year.

The National Summer Fruits Association, which accounts for 80 per cent of the home-grown soft and stone fruit supplied to supermarkets, is hoping to deliver 14,000 tons of strawberries, 40 per cent up on last year. Raspberries are expected to yield about 1,500 tons, 50 per cent more than last year.

The warm weather is not the only reason for good strawberry performance. Farmers are protecting a bigger acreage of strawberries with polythene tunnels that speed growth by keeping the soil warm.

Oliver Goacher expects to start picking tunnel-grown fruit before the end of this month at the family farm at North Wheatley. Notting-hamshire. Early May is the usual time to start harvesting the tunnel fruit", he said. "I cannot remember ever beginning before the end of April." Alastair Brooks, a director of Kentish Garden Ltd. Britain's biggest soft fruit cooperative, said he expected to be picking his first strawberries a month earlier than last year at his farm near Tonbridge in Kent.

Even glasshouse growers, who always expect to start harvesting in April have been surprised by how early the crop is. Peter Wensak, who grows more than 10 per cent of Britain's glasshouse crop at Pole House Nurseries at Lawford in Essex, said: "We began harvesting in the first week of April, two weeks earlier than in 1996, and should be finished by early May. Sugar levels look superb."

He is certainly cool and charming, but is he ruthless enough to make a difference?

Glasgow prepares for 'Mag Dog' McCafferty after 23 years spent in Australian prison

Escaped murderer appears in court

By A STAFF REPORTER

ALAN REEVE, who has killed three people and escaped from Broadmoor top security hospital 16 years ago, appeared before magistrates yesterday after being extradited from the Irish Republic.

Reeve, 49, was being held in Broadmoor indefinitely for killing his friend Roger Jackson when they were both 15. He was arrested two weeks ago in Cork, where he had been living with his fiancee.

Reeve, who on Thursday lost his last-minute appeal in the Irish High Court against extradition. arrived at Bracknell Mag-istrates' Court from Heathrow under heavy police escort for the five-minute hearing. He was formally identified and handed over to the custody of the Thames Valley Police.

Reeve was re-arrested on warrants relating to the murder of Roger Jackson and the killing of a fellow patient in Broadmoor when he was 19. A year after his escape he shot dead a policeman in Amsterdam and served ten years in jail.

Police said Reeve was unlikely to face charges over his escape from Broadmoor.

Brian Mountford

Then Christians try to contribute to the election debate they are often accused of political bias, naivety, or

But the churches are in-volved in the political life of the nation by having a pastoral ministry in all levels of society, and specialist ministries in schools, universities, hospitals, prisons, the Armed Forces and many social agencies. Moreover, practical Christian action, such as running drop-in centres for the homeless, recreation centres for teenagers, church schools and aid projects in the Third World, makes an actual political difference.

When it comes to particular policies, however, Christians often disagree with one another on quite legitimate theological grounds. We have never found a watertight way of piping the teachings of the Bible and Christian tradition into a specific manifesto. But that does not invalidate the prophetic voice of Christianity. Prophecy, in this context, is about providing a spiritual critique of contemporary secular activities. Modern Christians would claim that the life of Jesus Christ sums up the essence of God's values and that His teachings and ex-ample provide an ideal for human behaviour.

The text that ruffles so many political manifestos is Jesus's insistence that you have to lose your life to save it. This is a way of asking how much one cares about people other than oneself. It is exemplified by Jesus on the Cross when He forgives His torturers and attends to the needs of the penitent thief hanging beside Him.

For better or worse, Church to change rules on marriage

By Ruth Gledhill, religion correspondent

THE Church of England, faced with increased competi-tion to conduct weddings, is examining all aspects of its marriage law and practice. But many believe that change will come too late to save the

Since the 1994 Marriage
Act, which came into force in 1995, an increasing number of couples have abandoned the Church or the dingy atmosphere of the register office for locations as offbeat as the Blackpool Tower, the Eurostar waiting room, castles or open fields.

Church leaders are also being forced to respond to the rise in cohabitation and divorce. Large numbers of couples resent having to jump through the hoops and endure the formalities of a church ceremony and opt instead for a civil wedding, or choose simply to live together. In 1993 the number of church weddings fell by 11,000 to 91,000, out of a total of 283,000 marriages in England. The 1994 figures, out next month, could show a further fall but the biggest drop is expected to have come in 1995, after the Marriage Act came into effect.

Clergy are concerned that, cheaper to marry outside a church, with an all-in-one ceremony and reception, more couples will tie the knot without any religious input to the ceremony.

Already the Church's General Synod has decided to abolish the traditional banns of marriage after they were condemned as a "medieval anachronism". Church authorities have delayed the process of abolition but not because they are having second thoughts. They want to present a package to Parliament in the next three years which is expected to include removing the need for banns to be read in church, changing the hours when weddings can take place, addressing the question of residence and making it easier for non-

The bishops are also tack-ling the widespread confusion over the remarriage of divorcees. Many couples hoping to make the trek to the altar find it baffling that while a divorced person can now be ordained to the priesthood, a divorced man or woman cannot under Church of England law be remarried in church if a former partner is still living. To add to the confusion, such under secular law. This has given rise to a wide variety of practice throughout the Church's 43 dioceses.

A divorcee's chance of a church wedding depends purely on where they live, how flexible the local vicar is prepared to be and whether he or she sticks more rigidly to Church or secular law. A working party chaired by the Right Rev Michael Scott-

Joynt, the Bishop of Winchester, has met three times to might change its approach to remarriage after divorce. It is due to report back to the house of bishops at the end of this year and is thought likely to recommend that remarriage in church should be sanctioned in some circumstances. Such a change would pave the way for the Prince of Wales, who will one day become the Church's supreme governor. to remarry in a London cathedral should he wish. Bishop Scott-Joynt said: Our task is to explore the situation and the circumstances that have led to it and to see whether we can make recommendations to resolve what is agreed generally to be an unsatisfactory situation."

Couples take centre stage

By Richard Duce and Ruth Gledhill

COUPLES may soon tread the boards at a West End theatre under plans to license the building for weddings. The Old Vic is the first of the London West End theatres to consider supplementing in-come by making use of the premises during daylight hours when bar and catering facilities stand idle.

It will join 1,500 venues, ranging from the romantic to the bizarre, licensed for weddings under the 1994 Mar-riage Act, which came into register offices are feeling the pinch as couples marry anywhere from Brighton Pavil-ion to Stoke City football club. James Bond theme pub in Nuneaton, Warwickshire, a 100 ft roller coaster ride in Yorkshire, or even on the set Coronation Street in Manchester.

The only requirements are that venues are secular and open to the public, the latter to allow objection on grounds of "just cause of impediment", such as bigamy or consanguinuity. Venues already licensed in London include the old library at Dulwich College, the Roof Gardens in Kensington High Street, Cambridge Cottage (former home of Dukes of Cambridge, at Kew Gardens), London Zoo, the riverside Trafalgar Tavern and the Savoy. Andrew Leigh, the Old Vic

general manager, said that couples could be charged £100 for being married on stage by the Lambeth council registrar. However Richmond Theatre in southwest London, which was licensed last year to hold weddings, charges £500 to hire the auditorium.

Hotel subterfuge outwits parish law

A MAN, a suitcase and a fur- friends who had overcome tive arrangement with the landlord of a country hotel would seem more appropriate to securing a divorce than a wedding, unless you are circumventing the fine print of the Anglican Church. Ancient rules and regulations preventing parish priests from marrying anyone out-side their domain in England or. Wales without a special licence from the Archbishop of Canterbury has done little to keep the Church in tune with modern living. For more than three hundred years my wife's family has lived and worked in North Wales, so it was with some significance that for our own wedding we chose a village church in the middle of a large farming community.

My wife decided she wanted to marry there because her parents, sister, cousins, aunts and uncles still live in the neighbourhood although no longer within the parish boundaries. In addition, the vicar is a close friend. Ignoring advice from similar problems with the church authorities and simply lied about their addresses. I wrote to Lambeth Palace seeking permission for us to marry in our chosen parish. We were turned down on the ground that 300 years of family history, personal friendship and sentimentality were not good enough reasons alone. It was then that the vicar suggested a "little white lie". To be eligible to marry in the church either the groom or bride has to be resident in the parish for at least three weeks. Acting on his suggestion I booked into the local hotel for a few days and, with the permission of the hotelier, established a permanent residence by leaving my suitcase and some belongings behind. I made sure I stayed at the hotel on subsequent visits to secure the wedding arrangements.

After some time I was then eligible to apply to the vicar as a resident of the parish and swear that the hotel was my usual place of abode when in the parish, which it is.

Europeans bemused by Kohl poster

Caricatures of foreign leaders are nothing new, Charles Bremner reports, but they have featured enemies more often than allies

"CAN you imagine Chancellor Kohl's party putting out a poster of John Major with a German politician on his knee?" The unthinkable image, invoked by a German official prompted chortles at the European Commission yesterday as Eurocrats reacted with near disbelief to the Tory advertisement featuring Tony Blair on the lap of the German

According to the canons of diplomatic correctness, the caricaturing in such a manner of a foreign leader, let alone that of Europe's "senior part-ner", is simply not done. "It is a sign that things must be pretty desperate in England if they have to resort to that," a French diplomat said. In Brussels, a British European Union official spluttered: "It is quite ghastly."

Elmar Brok, a senior German member of the European Parliament, said the Tory posters were "pitiful". "We should be partners with Brit-ain ... not fighting a battle," said Herr Brok, a member of Herr Kohl's Christian Democratic party.

There was little use pointing out that the poster is not really an insult because it portrays Herr Kohl as a giant along-side a puny Labour leader. The Germans are only too aware that they are viewed in Britain and elsewhere as the potential ogres of a federal

In wartime propagandists have weighed in with such things as the image of a rapacious and bloodstained Kaiser Wilhelm in the First World War. In the Second World War, British propagandists had a field day with images of Hitler, Mussolini, Emperor Hirohito and their

By the crude standards of such stuff, the Tories' picture of Mr Blair on an inflated Herr Kohl is small beer. The shock to diplomatic sensibilities comes from the way that Conservative Central Office is using the technique against the leader of a close ally which also happens to be the country with the thinnest of skins. So sensitive is the German establishment to the country's image, that they have staged learned conferences to analyse the reasons behind the polls that show their country to be one of the least loved on earth.

'It's amazing how important the British think we Germans are'

MOST Germans living in Britain reacted with amused tolerance yesterday to the sight of their Chancellor being used in the latest campaign stunt by the Tories.

Pastor Volkmar Latossek of the German Lutheran Church said: "I thought it was quite a funny joke to show Tony Blair as a ventriloquist's dummy to Helmut Kohl. I didn't take it seriously and I am sure most Germans won't.

What never ceases to amaze us, though, is how important the British think we are. We are famed for not having a sense of humour but the Germans do not take themselves as seriously as the fit is grotesque of John Major to pretend to get on well with Kohl at summits while as the Tory leader he authorises such low grade advertising. I don't know what the effect on the British election campaign will be, but it will have a negative effect on the Bonn Government with which Brit-strategy director at Flemings ain needs to do business." The London bureau of the German television network, ARD, was amused by the advert. A spokesman said: None of our bosses in Bonn seem to care too much about it. They are afraid of being seen to interfere in a British election so certainly don't want to start a fuss." The consensus among those working at the network was that Mr Major is too much of a gentleman to have concocted this idea. "We think was the desperate men around him in Central Office". Newspaper editorials in Germany did attack Mr Ma-jor for what was largely regarded as a misguided advertisement.

Süddeutsche Zeitung, a leading newspaper published in Munich, comments this morning: When John from London next meets his friend Helmut from Bonn, he will take him to one side and tell him it wasn't meant the way i appeared.

"Helmut won't need a trans lator on this occasion and unusually for him, speak Eng-lish. He will tell John, who won't be his friend any more. that he is a Little Englander and that he failed in the context of European history.

Tory advert signals surrender

THE Tories obviously no longer believe that they will still be in office after the election. No politician who seriously thinks he will be attending the Amsterdam summit in June would have authorised the latest Tory advertisement featuring a small Tony Blair sitting on a giant Helmut Kohl's knee.

If Britain really wants to negotiate at the summit, rather than just to posture, any government will need allies. But the Tories no longer seem interested in building alliances abroad, only in appealing to the crudest anti-German prejudices. The new advert will only antagonise other countries whose support Britain needs. No wonder leading Tory pro-Europeans are so furious, and depressed.

The crassness of the advert contrasts with the measured way in which Mr Major spoke on Wednesday about the need to keep open options on a single currency. This was an impressive performance. As Douglas Hurd argued then, it makes sense not to rule out participation for ever. as so many Tory candidates are eager to do now, since no one can know what the impact on Britain would be if a monetary union went ahead without sterling. The most likely scenario is that Germany and France will launch a core monetary union in 1999, or shortly afterwards, without Britain. If this succeeds, and within a couple of years the City of London is seen to be losing out and inward investment is falling, there will be strong pressure from business to join. But that possibility is denied by the Tory absolutists.

Of course, Labour's approach to Europe is open to question, and Mr Blair is untested as a negotiator. Mr Blair is relying on a change of attitudes in other countries, an abandonment of the old Delors vision of a social Europe and an acceptance of the need to avoid adding to business costs via new regulations. The arrival of a Labour government might lead to a revived attempt to broaden that would bring defence within the European Union and favouring a continuation of inter-governmental cooperation on foreign, immigration and justice issues. A Blair Britain would not be in the inner core of a so-called federal Europe. Indeed, Labour has itself

veered in a sceptic direction during the campaign - not just in the nationalist rhetoric of Mr Blair's article which secured the support of The Sun but also in the party's ridiculously jingoistic election broadcast featuring a bulldog. Labour often talks about offering a lead on Europe, but has failed to do so for fear of supposedly alienating voters who previously supported the

Mr Major said on Wednesday that he was putting the national interest ahead of party interest. Yesterday's advert put the party interest first. There is no way this approach can advance Britain's interests in Europe. It is an act of desperation that has debased political debate.

Betty Boothroyd enjoys opponents' support in an 'oasis of sanity and civilization'

One-woman show gives politics a miss

Ben Macintyre meets Madam Speaker, who has few complaints about missing the 'cut and thrust of a good fight' in in West Bromwich West

Birmingham on my way to find Betty Boothroyd on the first day of her campaign for re-election, I called the "Friends of the Speaker" headquarters in Oldbury for

"It's a piece of cake," said the cheery northern voice of the woman who answered. 'Aim for the council office, a thing that looks like a great big pagoda, then turn right." I thanked her and asked her name - it is always useful to have a contact among the campaign workers.

"This is Betty." came the reply.
Miss Boothroyd's campaign is, in more ways than one, a one-woman show - all singing, all dancing and no real politics. For Madam Speaker, in a revival of the ancient tradition that lapsed in the 1960s, is running unopposed by the major parties. More than that, the country's most popular parliamentarian is being supported by Conservatives and Liberal Democrats as well as her own Labour activists in West Bromwich West.

The former professional dancer was required to renounce party affiliations when she became Britain's first woman speaker in 1992. Thus her campaign is a world away from the acrid politicking to be found across the rest of the country. In her own words, the constituency where she has a nominal majority of nearly 8,000 is "an oasis of sanity and civilization". Her only opponents are a candidate from the National Democrats (formerly the National Front) and another claiming to represent the Official Labour Party who has, Madam Speaker observes, no link whatsoever with the party of Tony Blair. Seldom have two deposits been more hopeless-

The woman whose day job involves telling MPs to mind their language must carefully watch her own to avoid the merest hint of political bias. Even her outfit is a statement of political neutrality, a suit in startling House of Commons green. "I would have liked to campaign in the colours of West Bromwich Albion, but that's blue."

Miss Boothroyd's start in politics was as difficult and stressful as her present campaign at the age of 67, her 12th relaxing. Having begun her career as a House of Commons secretary, she fought and lost four elections for Labour before finally entering the Commons in 1973.

Of course I miss the cut and thrust of a good election fight," says the unmarried only daughter of Yorkshire textile workers. Many an MP has felt the hot gust of Miss Boothroyd's wrath, when the merry barmaid transforms herself into a flogging headmistress, but no scintilla of that will cloud this campaign. She is the mother hen contentedly roosting at the top of the coop, proudly watching her chicks as they peck each other to shreds in the farmyard below.

If Miss Boothroyd's constituents object to being, in effect, deprived of their democratic voting rights, few are prepared to say so, for in West Bromwich West she is widely seen as an unassailable mas cot, queen mother of the Mother of Parliaments.

"They may get better repreentation than if I was a backbencher. Ministers tend to give me a little priority," she understates. They come

She tells her audience "With a little bit of luck I shall be returned as parliamentary Speaker." It is her only reference to a unique election process in which luck, as well as most other normal electoral considerations, is playing precious little part.

As we sat in her empty and tranquil office, working on this non-campaign speech for a pre-ordained election. Miss Boothroyd produced two packets of cigarettes, Benson & Hedges and Rothman's. Her impartiality is so ingrained that, momentarily, Madam Speaker seemed uncertain which brand to smoke first. Finally she opted for a B & H. but I felt quite certain that her next smoke would be a Rothman's, then another

US-style district attorneys proposed

By JUL SHERMAN

JACK STRAW announced Labour plans yesterday to introduce chief Crown prosecutors in each police area as part of efforts to ensure that more criminals are convicted.

The Shadow Home Secretary said the plans for a locally based prosecution would be similar to the system in the United States where there was a district attorney personally responsible in each area. "In our system there will be a named, known, accountable and answerable chief crown prosecutor."

There would also be an independent review of the structures and procedures of the Crown Prosecution Service within the first year of a Labour government to cut bur-eaucracy and improve liaison between the service and victims and witnesses. Mr Straw said. "The service is overcentralised, inefficient and the morale of the staff is at an alltime low."

He said: "Nothing better illuminates the Conservatives' failure on crime than the now yawning gap between the number of crimes committed and the number of criminals convicted by the courts. Since 1980, crime has doubled but convictions have fallen by a third." In 1980, convictions were equivalent to 17 per cent of recorded crime, but by 1995

this had dropped to o per cent. Time after time, victims and their families face the trauma of being told that cases have been dropped or that the CPS. More than a fifth of all cases are now discontinued or written off." Meanwhile, the CPS had also failed to weed out weak cases coming to court, he said. "It is time for swift action to reform the Crown Prosecution Service to ensure that it works more effectively with the police, takes greater account of the impact of its decisions on victims and brings more offenders to justice.

The Liberal Democrats announced proposals yesterday to combat juvenile crime by a such as anti-truancy measures, and effective punishment for more persistent offenders, including more use of non-custodial sentences.

Thatcher supports revolt against single currency

BARONESS THATCHER gave her support to the Tory grassroots' revolt on Europe yesterday when she rejected John Major's negotiate-anddecide policy on the single currency.

The former Prime Minister. who had so far deliberately refrained from answering questions on Europe, relented on the campaign trail in Essex yesterday. Asked whether Britain should enter the single European currency, she replied: "Good heavens. No! I was the one who invented the answer: No. No. NO!"

Her intervention came as it emerged that only 25 or so Tory candidates in Conservative-held seats, excluding ministers, have rejected financial support from the millionaire Paul Sykes. Some 227 have received help ranging between E1,000 and £3,000. The scale of the revolt is underlined by the fact that the Tories are defending 336 seats with 90 being defended by ministers who are barred from ruling out a single currency.

Conservative Central Office, which had been hoping that THE REBELS

A further S9 Tory candidates have declared themselves against a single currency, making a total of 282. The new candidates are:

Lady Thatcher would stay silent on the subject, attempted to play down her remarks last night. "Lady Thatcher is fighting an energetic campaign to ensure John Major wins the election." an official said. A spokeswoman for Lady Thatcher said: "It was not a slip of the tongue. She was stating her deeply held views on a single currency."

says something different. She's obviously fed up with his U-turns and his equivocations and, like the rest of the country, with his weak leadership."

John Redwood backed Lady Thatcher's right to speak out. "It is the quote of the day. Maggie was magnificent. She recongises that it would be a massive transfer of democracy and would fight it."

Mr Sykes dismissed the charge that he had been disloyal by funding candidates prepared to flout the party policy. He has made a donation to Central Office to help pay for its poster campaign. Leading Tories on the list of 25, who have not signed-up, include Edwina Currie, Sir Edward Heath, and Hugh Dykes, chairman of the British Parliamentary Group in the House of Commons. "They are part of a tiny rump of Europhobes," Mr Sykes said.

The argument has swung our way completely. Virtually every Tory MP in the House of Commons after the election will have publicly opposed the are ministers," he declared.

Lady Olga sallies forth to battle

By MICHAEL EVANS

LADY Olga Maitland on the campaign trail is a formidable speciacle, remonstrating with any Lahour supporter for even considering voting against John Major.

"Carry on", she tells an undecided voter, rather in the manner of a commanding of ficer dismissing her troops, after a brief chat with the woman. "Jolly good", "good show" and "bravo", she declares when she encounters

Conservative supporters.

Everyone in Sutton and Cheam, where Lady Olga is defending a 10,756 majoray over the Liberal Democrats finds her face familiar even if they are not sure why. She has a way of stopping people in their tracks. Much is made of John Mujor's Britton uptringing but Lady Olga has been trying to persuade the Prime Minister, who lived locally as a child, to return to his "real roots" and campaign her. She explains that he has decided against, because he regards the constituency as a safe Tory seat.

Joke call wins two votes for Major

ASHLEY REECE had the last laugh when his girl-friend. Julie Brown, rang him at work to tell him to go to the shops on the way home (Arthur Leathley writes). As the building worker listened to her shopping instructions on his mobile phone, he saw John Major yards away and told Julie he was going to put the Prime Minister on the line.

Mr Major gamely took the telephone from Mr Reece and chatted with Julie, who assumed that her boyfriend was practising one of his practical jokes. Throughout the conversation, Julie, 27, remained convinced that she was still talking to one of Ashley's workmates on a building site in Bolton.

insisted that he was the genuine article, the office administrator refused to be convinced.

Only when newspaper photographers descended on her office in Darwen, did Miss Brown realise she really had been talking to the Prime Minister.

'Ashley's always winding me up so I just thought it was a joke," she said. "I didn't take much interest in the conversation herause I was sure it was one of his friends. I can't believe that it was actually Mr Major.'

The Prime Minister steered clear of politics during the brief conversation, but will doubtless be gratified by the news that both Ashley, 25, and Julie are prepared to vote Conservative in the highly marginal Labour seat of In 1992 Labour won by just 120 votes. A few more wellhandled joke phone calls could deliver a Conservative majority. Julie said: "I just wanted Ashley to pick up some balloons for a wedding. It doesn't surprise me that he called Mr Major over. He's always having a

Bevan boy drops family values to turn Tory

A 14-YEAR-OLD Welsh schoolboy who is related to the Labour radical Aneurin Bevan began his own political career yesterday when he ambushed John Prescott on radio about the launch of new Labour.

Bevan quit Clement Attlee's Cabinet before the 1951 election in protest at the imposition of NHS charges and emerged as the leader of left-wing criticism of the leadership. But Thomas Goodhead was not advocating a return to the leftwing values of his famous relative - Thomas's great-great-grandiather was uncle to the stalwart Labour MP for Ebbw Vale, who was architect of the NHS. Instead Thomas has broken with family tradition and has set his sights on the leadership of the Tories. He wants to match the record of young William Hague and address the party conference Thomas, from Rogerstone, near Newport, Gwent, might have to wait two years to become a Tory Party member but yesterday he scored some political points against Radio 4's Election Call. The Conservative Party in Wales last night hailed their young admirer and asked him for lunch with Michael Howard, the Home Secretary, in Cardiff today.

Bespectacled Thomas, who reads

The Economist and the Financial Times, and wants to be a barrister. asked Mr Prescott: "Is the launch of the new Labour Party simply an admission that old-style socialism simply does not work and that Conservative privatisation policies do?" He said old Labour was "simply unelectable" and accused the leadership of having suddenly changed its policies.

Nursing a broken foot at home, Thomas spotted two days ago that Labour's deputy leader was in the radio hot seat yesterday. He tele-phoned at 8.10am and was selected to go on air. Mr Prescott told him a debate had taken place in the Labour Party on Clause Four. "That was led with great courage by Tony Blair. It's not a secret that I was apprehensive about it. But we had that debate and overwhelmingly endorsed by a ballot of all our members to begin a new change. I developed a new form of ideas - a public and private partnership.

place. You have traditional values in a modern setting and I'm quite happy with it, apparently so it appears does the electorate."

But after the exchange Thomas was not persuaded by Mr Prescott's answer and said he had ducked the issue. "He didn't answer me honestly and truthfully he sidestepped the question. I think the change was really because they were unelectable and they have been forced to change to try and hoodwink the British people."

Thomas, a pupil at Bassaleg Comprehensive School, near Newport, said he enjoyed political arguments with his family, particularly his grandfather, who had learned the art of political debate from Bevan.

But there was also plenty of debate with his mother. Pat, a Labour supporter, and his father, David, a Conservative. He liked John Major but disapproved of the party's negative campaigning in the election. He would support William Hague in a future Tory leadership election: "I feel he is a genuine person who wants to make the country better."

New Tory: Thomas Goodhead, 14, a relative of Bevan

It's all perfectly clear, if clearly far from perfect

New Labour or not, for John Prescott clause four still comes first before clauses one, two and three. But Peter Barnard is sure he means what he knows

THE impression that John Prescott is an old Labour cannon liable at any moment to blow holes in the new Labour edifice took something of a knock yesterday. The only wreckage on the floor of the Election Call studio when Mr Prescott left was that of the English language, dust rising from the rubble of smashed syntax.

I have never understood why the Labour spin-doctors are so nervous of the Labour deputy leader. He is the most niable politician of his generation. Almost every statement he makes can be covered by the phrase "that is not what he meant", for the simple reason that a transcript of his words often conveys no meaning, or several. I say this in praise of Mr Prescott, not condemnation. He is clearly a man of action in an era of wordsmiths. Obliged by the election campaign to speak, Mr Prescott takes the shortest route from the start to the end of a sentence by the expedient of omitting words along the way. We know what he means and he knows we know what he means. "He was inferring I was referring today." Textual analysts have built careers on such pronouncements. Mr Prescott was referring to a statement about the effects of the minimum wage, attributed to him as having been made recently but actually made, he claims, five years ago. All perfectly clear. And on the same subject: "It is socially right that so many people being exploited on poverty pay is quite wrong." This is very nearly the perfect political statement, in that it appears to say two opposite things at the same time. "It is socially right to do something about the fact that so many people being exploited on poverty pay is quite wrong" is what Mr Prescott would have said, but he prefers to speak as if contributing to the miss-ing-words round on Have I Got News For You.

One of yesterday's callers went off the line having had his views ringingly endorsed by Mr Prescott, or as the deputy leader chose to put it.
"I'm with you at one on this." At first I thought he had invited the caller to lunch, but the reply was just a variant on Mr Prescott's style some-times, instead of omitting words, he expels them in the

Do I mock? No. Mr Prescott has passion, something notably absent from Election Call so far. People would be ill-advised to operate heavy machinery after tuning in to most of these programmes. but Mr Prescott grabs the camera by what he would probably call its throat and uses sheer force of will to clear a path through doubt and contradiction.

There was a nice moment vesterday when Thomas Goodhead, 14, from Newport rang up (see above).

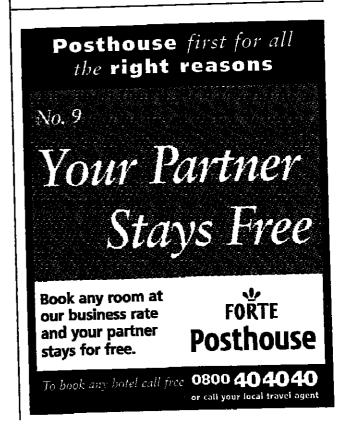

Mr Prescott trotted out the usual mantra about "traditional values in a modern setting" and used some exam ples from the area of health care. How fortuitous. Neither Mr Prescott nor I realised at the time that young Thomas is a relative of Aneurin Bevan, who introduced the NHS. Near the end of the programme Mr Prescott produced a syntactical masterpiece, a greatest hits of Prescott-speak incorporating a redundant definite article. the word "referendum" used as a verb and a split infinitive: You know that we've set up a commission to look at the proportional representation and we'd offer that as a matter if agreed to actually referendum the country

THE TIMES SATURDAY APRIL 19 1997 The times of a series of interviews with the party leaders: Paddy Ashdown talks to The Times Paddy puts his shirt on public wisdom By Peter Stothard Popel disposition is row the sub-quidibility of the system, we discovered as a schedule of bus of crobsent lunders and a schedule of bus of crobsent lunders and a schedule of bus of crobsent lunders and a schedule of bus of the system. We discovered the system with the system with the system with the system with the system. We discovered the system with the system with

Churchill once put it. But it helps. Despite sluggish opin-ion polls and a schedule of bus that would have made the great old man weep even in his Liberal youth, Paddy Ashdown seemed almost on fire with hope when he came to The Times this week.

His first act of the interview was to strip down to a twillstriped white shirt. By the time that the interview was over, he had three times bet that shirt on the successful outcome of tax-raising, targetedspending campaign. He was booming with prophecy, too.

Our columnist, Anatole Kaletsky, was the first to be offered the wager, which came with tasteful blue and gold Lib Dem cuff-links, when he suggested that Ashdown's policy of higher taxation was political suicide according to conventional wisdom these days. "I'm betting my shirt that you've got it wrong and that all of you have misread the signals being sent to us," he retorts. "You think that the electorate is super-simplistic about this: high tax bad, low tax good, full stop, end of story. My hunch is that there is a different message. And I think it's being proved right".

The Liberal Democrat leader explains that he sees a society endangered by "the fracturing of the contract on tax". He says that voters are still willing to pay for better public services but are no longer prepared to sign a blank cheque to some ill-respected "Mr Politician". They want to know where the money will go and how it will be spent efficiently. Politics is a service industry and needs to have quality service."

Peter Riddell looks unconvinced. Ashdown points to an experiment in Lib Dem-controlled Richmond, in southwest London, where voters were consulted on whether they wanted a high, medium or low range of council tax. each choice matched with services. He claims that the people have consistently said "go for the high one, because they have won the trust of the massive vindication of the principle that those who support higher taxes do not get

t is all a struggle -- but a sincere one, we think. He sees a sound future for societies that have found either the consent to tax more or the consent to provide less or the consent for provisions to be made in private ways. For those whose leaders dodge the issue altogether, he sees only more alienation and anger. In this election he is offering up the Audit Commission as "a referee on behalf of the public between the taxpayer and the tax-spender". For the future he sees much great-

"What we have to do eventually," he says in full prophetic voice, "is to build in the political sphere what Mrs Thatcher built in the economic sphere." His view of the Thatcher years is that while economic dependency was reduced (and "by and large", he to engender a culture of experi-

"whether a Tory or Labour government is elected it will have to betray either its public services policy or its tax policy. I predict that within five years both of the other two parties will be coming onto the agenda that we've pioneered in this election. Otherwise the whole concept of public services in this country will go down the

When Ashdown makes a prediction, his demeanour is wholly different from that of his normal discourse. More than any other politician I can remember, he seems genuinely to be trying to "see" the fractured contracts or failing schools or hospitals of which he speaks. He tightens his brow so that an M-shaped line like a McDonald's arch glows from ear to ear. The veins in his temples are inked in pale blue. He shades his eyes so that he looks almost shell-

says, "I am in favour of that") "she created an even more dependent political structure". After years of weakening in local government, "we have to strike a new contract between the citizen and the State". Riddell asks him whether his role for the State is entirely local in nature: after all, that is where the heart and soul and talent of the party is. Ashdown leaps from the contemplative to the combative. You're wrong, Peter. The idea that we are somehow a pressure group for local government is a misjudgment. Part of our new contract between citizen and State is to put more power down at local level; but part is mentation with government across the country.

We need to find a new settlement in which the concept of political self-reliance is important. If the political business of the next ten or 15 years is managing down the people's aspirations for public services, you have to tie the people in to the process of decision. As long as the taxpayer believes that the money being spent in the local hospital isn't theirs because it is laundered through London, then you will never persuade them to cut this hospital and allow that one to remain open."

At this point the arches on the Ashdown brow are golden again. The prophetic passion is in full flow. We try to wrest to get involved. But you the conversation back to the present. Does he really think that the country is in the mood for his "culture of experimentation? Do not most people have a greater desire just to get on with their lives with the minimum contact with politics

Well, of course, you are right," he says. But, before we can explore the contradictions between the future and the present. Ashdown is back in the 1970s in his attempt to prove that his vision must necessarily come to pass. "Remember the Red Robbo argument at British Leyland, when Michael Edwardes came along and told the car workers that, sorry, they had to take the decisions. And they all said: hang on a second, mate, my job is to come in between nine and five and your job is to pay me. Me take responsibility? Certainly not. "Now we have an exact political parallel of that. Do people want to take responsibility for their actions? No. They want us to decide for them. It's easy. They can can't afford to do that any longer. The system won't

"What you're arguing," he tells us with a professorial movement of glasses from shirt pocket to thigh, "is that we should allow the British public to go on as the British worker went on, that it is our ich to be benevolent politicians and to deliver them full shopping baskets in all circumstances with every hospital kept open. You can't do that. They are going to have to get involved in the process."

aletsky persists with the question that Ashdown's vision. attractive though it may be, must surely be at odds with the success that Labour has enjoyed since weakening its traditional commitment to public services. Out comes the white-twilled wager again, complete with silk tie partypatterned in yellow camels and hive flowers.

"I come back to the fact that I'm betting my shirt on you all being wrong. Labour has made a major strategic error. It has done what British doing: it is fighting the next war on the basis of the last one. This is not 1992. The mood of the country is different. I see that we're right and I said at the beginning of the election to my colleagues: dare to be different". Riddell asks Ashdown if he thinks he is alone with this vision or whether any other prominent politicians share it. # America on alert n 'as military gangs mark red-letter day

FROM QUENTIN LETTS IN NEW YORK

FEDERAL workers, military sentries and National Guard bomb squads across the United States were on high alert for today's "Militia Day", the red-letter day for American militia groups.

The fourth anniversary of the fiery conclusion of the Waco siege — and the second anniversary of the Oklahoma City bombing - allowed the country's numerous military gangs to revel in their selfimportance and indulge their taste for outlandish plots. The most bizarre of these was that the US Air Force Al0 Thunderbolt attack jet, which went missing in the Rockies on April 2, has been hijacked by an anti-government group. According to the conspiracy-theory fraternity, it will today be directed in a bombing raid on the federal courthouse in Denver, where the Oklahoma bomb suspects are being tried.

The US Air Force dismissed the claim, saying the missing plane had probably crashed. A militia man told me after too many beers in a New York bar this week that it was in a secret hangar in Colorado.

'Militia Day", or "Patriots' hay", is the now annual lagday for the various selfarmed, uniformed, anti-federalist military gangs that have sprouted in the dustier regions of America in recent years, The fear among federal officials yesterday was that some oddball might try to stage a display of pyrotechnics to mark the April 19 anniversary of the FBI's "murder" - as the militia see it — of the Waco Branch Davidians.

In Atlanta, Georgia, where there has been a spate of attacks on abortion clinics, bomb disposal experts were on standby. From the Washington headquarters of the FBI came a warning to "field agencies" across the nation to beware of suspicious packages. US Justice Department employees were advised to close Venetian blinds to diminish injuries from flying glass in the event of an explosion

Guards at military bases and federal agency buildings were urged to be especially vigilant. Leave at the Colorado-based North American Aerospace Defence Command was cancelled after an unspecified security threat. "We are certainly aware of April 19," said Bill Licatovich, a spokesman for the US Marshals Service. The General Services Administration, responsible for security of federal buildings, admitted that it was keeping a special watch on central Denver.

In Dallas, Texas, a threeday "Preparedness Expo 97" exhibition and conference, which ends tomorrow, was attracting thousands who share a distrust for federal government and the big hand of "Uncle Sam".

Seminars were held about what really happened" in the Oklahoma bombing and at Waco. If some people are to be believed, the whole thing was planned and approved by Washington, and the refrain of those attending was "personal freedom". Stands at the conference were selling emergency stores for the muchexpected Armageddon, from Geiger counters to powdered foods, plus batteries, blankets, generators and fuel cans.

Last night saw a wellattended lecture from survivalists, people who are convinced that the US Government will lead the nation to disaster, but keen to pass on their tips on how independentminded citizens might endure

Dunblane visit prompts gun law rethink in Australia

FROM RACHEL BRIDGE IN SYDNEY

BOB CARR, the Premier of New South Wales, yesterday said the federal Government would look at introducing greater controls on handguns in Australia after claims by parents of the Dunblane victims that the laws are as lax as they were in Britain before the school massacre. Three relatives of children shot at the Scottish school gymnasium are in Australia to meet the families of victims of the Port Arthur massacre last April, in which 35 people died when Martin Bryant opened fire at the Tasmanian tourist site. Gordon Bounds, a family friend of Aimie Adam, who was seriously wounded at Dunblane, said: "You can't afford for lives to be lost before legislation is changed." Rehecca Peters, chairman of the National Coalition for Gun Control, said that while Australia had tightened the laws on semi-automatic rifles and shotguns after the Port Arthur tragedy, it had failed to address the regulation of handguns. Under Australia's existing laws a person owning a handgun must be a member of a target shooting club, but there is no requirement to store guns at shooting clubs nor limits on the number of handguns a person may own.

At an emotional gathering in Sydney, the Dunblane rela-tives asked Australians to mark the first anniversary of the Port Arthur tragedy by lighting candles on April 28 in the same way that people across Britain lit candles on March 13 in memory of the Dunblane victims. Mr Carr donated a A$0,000 (£2,800) cheque to support the victims of the Dunblane shooting and said that he had written to John Major and Tony Blair asking them to match his contribution.

Mr Gingrich will not have to pay a dime of principal or interest on the loan for eight years and so far no collateral has been negotiated, an arrangement many bankers said they would not accept.

Mobutu clan'is plotting to kill ÚS oil workers'

PRESIDENT Mobutu's family and close entourage are considering plans to kill American expatriates working in the Zairean port city of Matadi using an Angolan rebel group.

Sources within the family said that the plot is aimed at provoking military intervention to prevent advancing Zairean guerrillas from taking Kinshasa, the capital.

The plan, which has not yet been accepted by the President, is that a 1,000-man group based in the Angolan enclave of Cabinda, a few miles from Matadi, would be armed by Zaire and sent into the town. "Those who support the scheme believe that they can pretend to the outside world that the killing was done by Laurent Kabila [the leader of Zaire's rebel movementj." said a source at Mr Mobutu's presidential palace.

Both this source and others said that Americans, most of them employees of oil com-panies, would be targeted. Their throats are to be cut. The planners want to make the scene as horrible as possible," one member of the President's family said.

Mobutu Nzanga, 27, the President's son, was reported by a news agency yesterday to have dismissed the massacre suggestion as "pure intoxica-tion" and "ridiculous nonsense". Other members of the family have also argued against the plot and insist that the family should not be behind any schemes for a violent end to Mr Mobutu's 32-year rule. "Killing Ameri-

amid fears of a cholera epi-demic and Zairean violence. The first planned airlift - of 80 Rwandan children - was cancelled at Kisangani yesterday after angry scenes during which United Nations workers were briefly held hostage and their vehicles stoned.

The operation seems to be in bad trouble," conceded Paul Stromberg for the United Na-tions High Commissioner for Refugees. "We are confused and frustrated. This latest development is a real setback. It looks like the refugees could now be here for a while. The evacuation has been suspended indefinitely."

There are an estimated 100,000 Rwandan refugees living in makeshift camps and in the bush south of Kisangani. So far 327 cases of cholera have been detected at the encampment of Kasese about 20 miles south of the city. At least 25 Rwandan refugees are known to have died from cholera in the past week. Zairean rebels, who now control about half the country, were greeted by jubilant residents when they took Kisanga-ni, Zaire's third city, last month. But the inhabitants have grown increasingly hostile to the refugees, among more than two million Hutus who fled Rwanda after the 1994 genocide. Many still in Zaire are deemed to have taken part in the genocide and, more recently, to have fought with the Zairean Army against the rebels.

The scandal was sparked by Israel TV allegations three months ago that political corruption had been involved in Mr Netanyahu's short-lived appointment of the previous attorney-general, Roni Bar-On, who resigned after 12 hours amid an outcry over his blatant unsuitability. The appointment was allegedly fixed to permit a key government supporter. Aryen Den. head of the religious Shas party, to secure a plea bargain in a corruption case.

An opinion poll published by the Tel Aviv daily Maariv showed 52.6 per cent of Israelis say Mr Netanyahu must stand down and call elections if indicted. Another, in the rival paper Yediot Ahronot. showed 52 per cent want him to resign if convicted.

FROM SUSAN BELL IN PARIS

PRESIDENT CHIRAC is expected to announce a snap election within the next few days. Speculation in the French press and among members of parliament that he would dissolve the National Assembly to secure a renewed centre-right ma-jority for the remainder of his seven-year term reached fever pitch yesterday as it was reported that he would make his decision after

"Dissolving (parliament) looks the most likely possibility, but nothing is ruled out." said Michel Péricard, president of M Chirac's Gaullist RPR party in the National Assembly. Le Monde reported that those in favour of a snap election were confident they had convinced the President of their arguments. June 1 and 8 have been singled out by commentators as the most likely days for the two-round election, after M Chirac returns on May 1 from a trip to China and before he attends the European Union summit in Amsterdam on June 15.

The National Assembly was emptier than usual for a Friday afternoon, as deputies hurried back to their constituencies last night. The state-owned television channel TF1 reported that printers are laying in stocks of paper in preparation for orders of campaign literature.

For the first time since the rumours of an early election began to appear in the French press two weeks ago, the French financial market became unsettled yesterday. The bourse slumped 2.2 per cent in early trading, and the franc slipped to its lowest level against the mark this month. M Chirac has been under pre sure from most centre-right politicians, including Alain Juppe, the Prime Minister, to call a general

ment must impose a strict austerity drive if France is to meet the Maastricht 3 per cent maximum budget deficit criteria for single currency in 1998. A leaked finance ministry memo forecasting a deficit of 3.8 per cent this year, rising to 4.5 per cent next year, blamed the size of the shortfall on an increase in social security spending resulting from a 128 per cent unemployment rate and a fall of Fr15 billion (£1.6 billion) from VAT. An early election would take advantage of the fact that the Socialists are in disarray. In the mind of the French public. they still bear the scars of the Mitterrand era. # Italy goes on alert after Iranian terrorist squad 'sets up base in Milan'

FROM RICHARD OWEN IN ROME

ITALIAN military intelligence reported yesterday that Iran's "terrorist centre in Europe" had moved south of the Alps from Germany to Milan, and issued a warning of an imminent terrorist attack on the Pope "or an Italian target such as an airport".

Police went on high alert throughout Italy and in Varican City, with explosives experts and sniffer dogs meeting all flights to

Rome and Milan from the Middle East and North Africa. The warn-under a road bridge and defused Grey Wolves with Iranian-backed destroyed the Turin Shroud, and ing came after a marked rise in tension between Tehran and European capitals in the wake of a German court ruling last week linking Iran to the killing of four Kurdish dissidents in a Berlin restaurant in September 1992

Iranian anger over the German verdict coincided with the discovery of an apparent plot to blow up the Pope's motorcade during his visit to Sarajevo last weekend. Bosnian Muslim sources said the hours before the pontiff drove into Sarajevo from the airport were a relic of the Bosnian war. But Italian reports said the devices had been planted by "Turkish Islamic terrorists" in an attempt to "finish the business of 1981" — a reference to the attempt on the Pope's life by Mehmet Ali Agca, a Turkish gunman linked to the shadowy right-wing Turkish terrorist organisation known as the Grey Wolves,

Reports said the Sarajevo mine

Mujahidin who had fought in Afghanistan and then in Bosnia.

Italian officials said that although Rome had "good relations" with Iran and other Muslim nations, the warning of Islamic terrorism was being taken seriously. It followed an emergency meeting of Italian intelligence chiefs at the Interior Ministry in Rome on Thursday night. The atmosphere in Italy is jittery after a still-

The Vatican said the Pope planned to visit Beirut next month, even though Lebanon is still the base of Hezbollah, the Iranianbacked militant Shia.group. Cardinal Angelo Sodano, the Vatican Secretary of State, said the pontiff. 76, was "not especially alarmed".

Italian newspapers, quoting intelligence sources and Iranian exiles, said the headquarters of Iranian terrorism and espionage in Europe" had been transferred to Milan in the guise of an Islamic cultural centre". La Repubblica noted that the "centre" was funded and organised by Mohsen Rafik Doust, described as a "fanatical" Iranian official close to President

Rafsanjani. Corriere della Sera, published in Milan, said the decision to relocate to the city had been taken a year ago when Bonn first accused the Iranian intelligence services of being behind the 1992 Berlin murders. The paper said two Islamic "hit squads" were believed to have entered Italy recently, one by train, the other by boat from Tunisia.

Greek troops give poetic Albanian rebels wide berth

GREEK troops yesterday de-layed their entry into the anarchic southern Albanian port of Vlore, after warnings from an Italian exploratory mission that they had been confronted by local warlords.

The transport ship Samos, with 130 troops and 34 vehicles on board, diverted north and docked at Durres, which is safely under multinational control. Last night the Greeks drove south and made a temporary base in Fier, just north of Vlore, to await instructions from Operation Alba's Italian commander.

The leader of Vlore's selfproclaimed Committee for Public Salvation. Albert Shite. was surprised by the Greeks' decision, assuring them that they "are welcome here according to our tradition of hospitality". It seems, however, that it was this same traditional hospitality - a gun-toting gang met the Italians 24 hours earlier - which persuaded the two colonels to divert to Durres. The Greeks also claimed that the approach channels to Vlore harbour were choked by shipwrecks.

The citizens of Vlore, who were badly affected by the failed pyramid investment schemes, remain insistent that their town will remain outside the Government's control as long as President Berisha whom they blame for the loss of their life savings - stays in

The committee's resident poet then read another few stanzas, highly critical of the Italian Navy and the President, which sparked a hearty rendition of "Down with Berishal"

Stoyanov are ubiquitous. But the Socialists' strength has always been in the countryside and small towns. There is a hardcore vote among peasants who have seen living standards plummet as fuel and fertiliser prices have soared.

A major campaign issue has been the prospect of Nato and European Union membership, with the UDF promising rapid progress on both. But and the interim Government of Stefan Sofiansky, a UDF functionary, has moved noticeably closer to Moscow. Russia still accounts for more than a quarter of Bulgaria's foreign trade, with whole industries, such as timber, having Russian and often Mafia links.

In Moscow this week. Mr Sofiansky said Nato's "shadow will never darken" Bulgarian-Russian relations. It was agreed to set up a free-trade zone.

Politicians and celebrities vie for limelight at rocking grandmother's forty-eighth birthday party

Russia in thrall to pop diva

FOR a few hours this week the whole of Russia came to a standstill as the country paid its respects to Alla Pugachyova, the flame-haired pop singer and grandmother, who remains undisputedly the nation's favourite performer.

Top entertainers and members of the political elite joined thousands of fans at Moscow's Olympic stadium for a televised party to mark the 48th birthday of a woman who has hogged the limelight since her first hit single in 1975. To an outsider Mrs Pugachyova's universal popularity is something of a enigma. Although likened by her fans to Barbra Streisand and Tina Turner, the similarities are not immediately obvious. The plump, gap-toothed Russian diva's raspy love songs and tight miniskirts.

which once shocked and thrilled Soviet audiences, seem out of place in a country obsessed by Western culture, where pop music is dominated by local teenage rap and rock groups.

Nevertheless, the adoration is genuine and the fans shricked with pleasure when she sang her aptly-named hit Prima Donna, which is Russia's entry for next month's Eurovision song contest in Dublin. One indication of her popularity was

Inflation homes in on US envoy

THE Clinton Administration is expected any day to announce the appointment of James Collins, a career diplomat, as its new Ambassador to Moscow. But there is concern that he will have nowhere to live. Spaso House, the 18th-century mansion that has been the US Ambassador's residence since 1960, is at the centre of a rent row. Under a 20-year lease signed in 1985, the rent was fixed at 72,500 roubles a year, when the Russian currency had parity with the pound. But with hyper-inflation, the US is now paying about £10 a year. The Russians want the lease to be renegotiated and have threatened repossession if the Americans do not back down.

Sweet smell of success for Mayor

MUSCOVITES have many ways of describing their Mayor, Yuri Lunkov. His detractors call him tough and thuggish, while his supporters love his energy and efficiency. Until now, however, nobody has ever thought of the baldheaded city boss as "sweet-smelling". So it was with great surprise that shoppers scanning the shelves of popular Western aftershaves spotted an unusual

Western aftershaves spotted an unusual item recently, a new lotion called "Mer" ("Mayor"), which promises to make any man smell "fresh and masculine". The scent, the brainchild of the city's Novaya Zarya perfume factory, was intended to honour the Mayor for Moscow's 850th anniversary this year.

Whether you like Luzhkov or not, no one can deny that Moscow has a real one can deny mat woscuw data a real boss," said a factory spokeswoman. "Maybe after Russian women give their husbands this fragrance, it will inspire them to be more like Luzhkov, to get off the sofa, take charge and make the fives of heavest assists." At E. a bottle the letter is women easier." At £5 a bottle, the lotion is selling well, but one man told the Moscow

Elvis back on track with Dylan

PREVIOUSLY unreleased recordings of Elvis Presley are to be included in a forthcoming album which will mark the twentieth anniversary of the singer's death. Some of the material, which includes Presley singing a ponderously basso cover version of Bob Dylan's Blowin' in the Wind, was found in a locked filing cabinet which belonged to the singer's father, Vernon. Researchers cut a new key for the cabinet, opened it cautiously and found a mixed bag of Presley musical memorabilia. Much of it was worthless, but it included the Dylan song.

RCA Records, which owns many of the rights to Presley's music, hopes to capitalise on the present public taste for retrospective, often imperfect rock anthologies. Elvis Presley: A Life in Music will, said RCA, contain 77 unreleased Presley performances.

Church in Tuscany yields 16th-century mummies

crosses painted on the lids,

NINE perfectly preserved and tully clothed bodies of men. women and children dating from the 16th century have been discovered at a Tuscan church celebrated for its Piero della Francesca frescoes. Officials at the Basilica of San Francesco in Arezzo said the mummified corpses amounted to a "l6th century time

The basilica, a magnet for tourists, is famed for Piero's cycle, The Legend of the True Cross, a remarkable series of frescoes completed in 1466 depicting human history and redemption, with portraits of Solomon, the Queen of Sheba and the Empress Helena, the mother of Constantine. The frescoes had been damaged by damp and have been restored. The costumed bodies came to light when workmen ripped up the basilica floor to install dehumidifying systems in the final phase of restoration.

The bodies, found in plain being examined by Professor Gino Fornaciari, İtaly's foremost "paleo-pathologist", known as "doctor to the ancients" for his work on the remains of such "patients" as Pope Gregory VII (who reigned from 1073-85). Professor Fornaciari said the coffins found at Arezzo were "spaceships from another world. carrying a precious cargo of information". New technology would enable scientists to discover fresh clues to the lost past, he told La Repubblica. He said the bodies had not been embalmed but had dried naturally. "This is a chance phenomenon, and very rare," the professor said. Officials at Arezzo said that almough the basilica walls suffered from damp, the space heneath the floor was unnaturally dry. This was because the floor, finished in 1377, had been formed from the ceiling of an earlier 13th century Romanesque church beneath Acuse Car

Church officials are examining local records to identify the bodies, in addition to DNA tests on the tissue and bone. Professor Fornaciari said the fact that the nine had been buried close to the main altar and the Piero frescoes suggested they were considered "very important", and may have been benefactors of the Franciscan order. It was first thought the nine might have been buried at the time the artist was finishing his paintings, but a bronze medallion on one body is dated a century

There are 300 extant ancient Egyptian mummies, but "natural mummies" accidentally preserved by dry air, offer rare opportunities for scientists. and historians to gain insights into the more recent past.

Take Radio 3. It broadcasts some jolly fascinating stuff about Estonian opera, say, or Finnish lutes - that runs for months and doesn't notch up so much as a blip on the old audience meter. A few years ago a foolhardy Radio 3 controller polled his own staff and discovered that even they didn't tune in, except by accident. Or consider first-class county cricket, a ritual that is mostly conducted in front of no spectators at all, or at least none under the age of 102. What else? Well, we have the world's greatest cathedral choirs, and every night they sing Evensong sublimely to themselves and a few appreciative gargoyles. And we have the world's "biggest and best" arts festival, but 95 per

Please don't watch, it spoils the fun cent of all those Fringe hopefuls who trudge to Edinburgh each August find themselves perform-

Yet only a philistine would advocate the abolition of Radio 3, or the Edinburgh Festival, or county cricket. They are national treasures. And it is the sign of a civilised nation that they are there, like the emergency services, should anybody need them. So the fact that Channel 5 has graduated so quickly to this elite division - the Premier League of Invisibility — should be cause for rejoicing. After all, it's far more stylish to have no viewers at all than, say, two men and a dog — like the extended Nine O'Clock News. This way, Channel 5 can remain forever a source of delicious fantasy. Just what are the Adventures of a Bush Patrol (8am)? Why does nobody want to spend breakfast watching "Presidents Nixon and Ford explain how the Vietnam War affected foreign policy" (Wideworld, 8.30am)? And what is it about Wishbone Ca talking dog's time-travelling ad-venture", 9am) that repulses every man, woman and child in Britain?

We should not be told. Like the allure of the Finnish lute, these matters are best left to the imagination. Keep it up, Channel 5! And if your daytime viewing figures do start to show alarming signs of life, my advice is to kill them off completely with a hefty dose of election coverage.

The show opens in New York next Wednesday. At least, that is 66 million budget, previews have been beset by a technical problem of a peculiarly fundamental nature: the damn ship can't be relied upon to go down at the requisite moment. Yes, 85 years too late, mankind really does seem to have constructed an unsinkable Titanic. (Is this what theatre critics call a surprise happy ending"?) It would be a terrible headache for Titanic's producer, except that the poor chap had a fatal heart attack after the first rehearsal. The Broadway show is not the only troubled Titanic around. A film of the same name is currently being made by James Cameron, a director who seems to specialise in disaster movies in all senses. Its budget has climbed above £120 million (or £150 million, depending on which lurid estimate you read), and it's still rising — a bit must have seemed like a brilliant wheeze to devise a set consisting of a 24ft cabin cruiser and a b.000gallon tank. Unfortunately, the tank sprang a leak. Then another. There wasn't a dry eye in the house, but on the other hand there wasn't a dry floorboard either. The plumbing bill came to £125,000. Curiously, despite the epic scope for catastrophe, aquatic spectacles exert a bizarre grip on theatre folk. There are shipwecks and floods in Shakespeare, Mozart, Verdi, Wag-ner and Britten. Even Sir Cliff Richard's magnum opus. Heathcliff, manages to incorporate a storm at sea — quite a feat, given that Wuthering Heights is set on the Yorkshire moors. But if the Titanic taught us anything, it is that hostile briny elements often conspire to thwart the best-laid plans of mice, men . . and luvvies. To the old showbiz adage — "Never act with children or animals" - should be added another clause: "or in anything that involves tanks of water".

THEATRE: Benedict Nightingale overdoses on the

ou don't need to have seen The Goodbye Girl on screen to know the plot of the musical derived from it. You just have to hear the name of the librettist, who is Neil Simon, and listen to his opening scene (at the Albery). Single mother with cute 11-year-old daughter has just been abandoned by her lover.

Enter the single bloke to whom, to her understandable fury, the runaway has secretly sublet their New York apartment. How do you think this edgy situation unfolds?

The bloke turns out to be a serial child-murderer who leaves bits of chopped-up 11year-old all over the bright Manhattan furniture? No. Mrs Crosby, the landlady who fire to the apartment block, and ends up dancing on the ashes of its occupants? Wrong again. There were moments, I confess, when I hoped that might be the denouement; but I was forgetting the peculiar physics of Broadway musicals. If a show can be made more sentimental than the most sentimental original, no force in nature can stop it. This great truth is evident almost as soon as the orchestra is whisked up and behind the Manhattan skyline, to be

In the film Richard Dreyfuss, playing the aspiring actor Elliot, arrived there in an awful rainstorm, looking like an exhausted blend of fisherman and herring. Well, there may have been a tiny crack of stage thunder, but Gary Wilmot's Eliot is dry, neat, and in every respect the affable, laid-back and weatherproof fellow he is to remain. Need I go on? Yes, because

There's a kind of wry banter that purports to desentimentalise a sentimental situation but, because it is so self-conscious, does the very opposite. It is very Broadway. It is very Neil Simon. There is too much of it here.

side of the industrial picket line. And German industry is at last

The Tory photomontage de-picting Tony Blair as a ventriloquist's dummy on Helmut Kohl's knee is a cruel caricature. The German Chancellor certainly did not find the Labour leader easy to manipulate when they last met: Herr Kohl apparently told friends that he was disappointed by Mr Blair's lack of Suropean idealism. But Chancellor Kohl is far more hostile to John Major and Thatcherism; the Kohlbashing Tory campaign merely adds insult to mutual injury. And Tony Blair's ideological odyssey has taken him so far from his party's roots on the Left that, from a European perspective, he is now a man of the centre-right.

Helmut Kohl's decision to stand for another term in 1998 - perhaps the most important news of the campaign so far - has increased the likelihood that the single cur-rency will go ahead. Herr Kohl, the godfather of the euro, now expects to attend the birth in 1999, and may well see monetary union through the first, and most dangerous, three years of its infancy. Herr Kohl's presence at the christening feast makes it even less plausible that Tony Blair should wish to play the part of the wicked fairy.

For nearly a decade, King Kohl's crown prince has been Wolfgang Schäuble. They share with the Gaullist French President, Jacques Chirac, a visceral dislike of "Anglo-Saxon solutions". In a recent interview, Herr Blair is Schäuble roundly declared: "I know nobody firmly on in my party who sub-Kohl's side scribes to the caricature of politics that one assoof the ciates with Margaret Thatcher... Chancellor industrial Kohl hopes to ensure picket line that Christian Democracy still reigns in continental Europe even after he has to see Tony Blair as the British handed over to Herr Schäuble, possibly before the 2002 election. Whether that happens depends to some extent on the result of the British election. Seen from Germany, Tony Blair looks more like a Christian Democrat than a Social Democrat. The great names of the German left, Willy Brandt and Helmut Schmidt, have no more resonance for new Labour than Harold Wilson or Jim Callapresent Social Democrat party chairman, Oskar Lafontaine, Despite his friendship with Gerhard Schröder, the likely Social Democrat candidate for Chancellor, Mr Blair has gone out of his way union, privatising policies that are anathema to the German Left. Mr Blair has, in fact, a good deal more in common with Herr Kohl. Both have an almost messianic belief in their vocation to lead their peoples. Both have taken their parties as close to the centre ground as they dare. They share a robust disregard for ideology, a gift for resoundingly vague catchphrases, a liking for patriotic oratory which goes against the grain for some of their supporters, and an iron grip on their party machines.

Both are influenced by Christian doctrines of solidarity, fairness and personal responsibility. In Mr Blair's case, this derives from the Anglican tradition typified by Archbishop William Temple, to whom we owe the term "welfare state"; in Herr Kohl's case, it stems from the social encyclicals of Popes Leo IX and Pius XI. Blair's policies owe much to the German "social market economy" (patented by the Christian Democrat Ludwig Erhard), in which the State avoids intervention in, or ownership of, the economy except by regulation and the correction of "market

But if German Christian Democrats have a firm commitment to the welfare state (or Sozialstaut, as The Bishop of Rochester, Michael Nazir-Ali, says the Church must be flexible on remarriage

he marriage statistics are not good. Four out of ten weddings in this country will be followed by divorce. Many figures in public life, including members of the Royal Family, have been dithe Royal Farmly, have been divorced and have remarried or may seek to remarry in the future. Even clergy and bishops are involved in marrying divorced people and sometimes in divorce itself.

The Church, in the meanwhile, continues to teach that marriage is for life, although the legal and pastoral situation is more complex. In the case of the Church of England, the formal teaching of the Convocations - that divorced people should not be remarried in church - continues to have force. The General Synod, on the other hand, has endorsed the principle that there are circumstances in which a divorced person may be married in church even during the lifetime of a former partner.

To add to this confusion, incumbents have the right, under statute law, to marry a divorced parishioner, though they are also bound by canonical obedience to seek the bishop's advice. It is no wonder that bishops' desks are crowded with requests for guidance.

In my time as Bishop of Rochester. I have tried to give coherence to my advice regarding the marriage of divorced people in church. I declared at the outset that I was not an "indissolublist", and that in sufficient grounds for the breakdown of a marriage. The "exceptive clause" in the Gospel according to St Matthew (v.32 and xix,9), for instance, allows a divorce on the grounds of porneia. The precise meaning of this term has been a matter of debate but, at the least, it means "sexual evil". It is for the pastor, the theologian and the jurist to determine what constitutes sexual evil. There is a need, however, to be alert to the dangers of too rigid or too lax a view. Apart from adultery itself, I am inclined to the view that desertion (from the home or the marriage bed) and systematic cruelty may be included.

Some scholars believe that the exceptive clause is not part of the teaching of Christ. They say that it is a product of the early Christian community for whom St Matthew's Gospel was written. Even if this is the case, it still shows a need in the early Church for some such discipline, given its acceptance of Christ's teaching on marriage as normative (see Mark x, 1-12). A few New Testament scholars hold that, while the exceptive clause allows for divorce under certain circumstances, it does not allow remarriage after divorce. It is difficult, however, to read the passages in this way, and there is a weight of opinion (including Erasmus and the Reformers) in the n addition, there is the "Pauline privilege", where divorce seems to be permitted if an "unbelieving partner" is not willing to live any longer with the Christian partner (I Corinthians vii, 12-The Christian must do everything to make the marriage work. The Church has a vocation to be both prophetic and pastoral. It has to articulate clearly the Christian standard of marriage. This is no unattainable "ideal", but the way in which God intends us to live. Its abandonment is at the root of many personal and social problems in our society. Pastorally, the Church has to care for all those who have been hurt by divorce and, in certain circumstances, to prepare them for remarriage.

It is necessary, however, to be clear about the circumstances in which the Church will conduct the remarriage of divorced people.
There cannot be a "free-for-all". and phrases such as "irretrievable breakdown" and "mutual consent" do not constitute sufficient grounds for divorce or for the marriage of divorced people in church.

"No fault" divorce will make it harder for us to determine the exact circumstances leading up to the divorce - which is why some church leaders were opposed to it. The Church will, nevertheless, have to determine how a marriage broke up and provide appropriate pastoral support and care in the light of that knowledge.

In certain, well-defined circumstances this may lead to remarriage in church for a divorced person. On the one hand, the Church should not be co-opted by the culture into endorsing what is happening in Western society. On the other hand, it has to be sensitive to the culture around it and to minister within that culture with both clarity and flexibility. That is the challenge for the Church today. Environment Secretary. Twenty years ago Chichester was an attractive cathedral town. The great spire rose across water meadows to west and east. As in most continental towns, its rulers respected a cardinal planning principle, that the desires of people in general need guarding against the desires of some people in particular. Not any more. In the 1980s, outof-town shopping was given free rein. Even if something can bring central Chichester back to life, its meadows are gone and suburbia will stain its surroundings for ever.

Eras are rarely remembered for what most obsessed politicians at the time. Victorian Britain was convulsed over Catholic emancipation and Home Rule. We think of it as a nation of railways and Empire. I believe the Tory years will be recalled not for trade union reform or privatisation but for how a rural landscape was bespattered with housing estates and shopping centres. The cathedrals of Mrs Thatcher's Britain will be St-Tesco's-onthe Roundabout and St-Sainsbury's on the interchange. What distinguishes land-use planning from the general run of government activity is that its outcomes are irrevocable. Wreck a school, a hospital or a railway, and money can always patch it together

The external costs of rural sprawl include traffic congestion, impover-ished and crime-ridden city centres. subsidised urban renewal and the lost amenity of the woods and fields. These costs are real and some of them must eventually be met. A recent Bank of America report on California, template for Tory land-use policies, warned that unregulated land use could exact an exorbitant price: "Unchecked sprawl has shifted from an engine California's growth to a force that now threatens to inhibit growth and degrade the quality of our life."

A year ago the three party leaders signed a letter to The Times pledging collective support for "the countryside". The letter repeated one sent by their predecessors in 1929. The Cambridge economist J.B. Cullingworth replied that the 1929 letter was totally cynical. It was followed by an unplanned and unprecedented seizure of land for suburban sprawl. Was the present letter as cynical? The answer is yes, according to a searing report this week from the Council for the Protection of Rural England. Country development is still in the same primitive state that roads

sions make such mistakes, they get sued for negligence or struck off. Ministers just get peerages. The Environment Department is like the old Transport Department, it concocts figures of housing "need" that must be met, irrespective of price or external cost. Officials claim that 4.4 million new houses are needed by 2016, of which 40,000 must be in Berkshire, 60,000 in Hampshire and so on. This is the madness which, in the 1980s, saw 120,000 acres of countryside disappear, while 140,000 acres of developed land lay unused in towns and cities. Rural land was consumed because it was cheap to the purchaser, not the taxpayer or the land-user.

Yet he is considering "bolt-on" towns at Peterborough, Swindon and Bristol, "factory stores" outside Street, Mansfield and Hartlepool, and a new town at Micheldever. Hampshire will be suburbanised from Basingstoke to the edge of the New Forest. Over the past decade a city the size of Bristol was built in the English country each year. According to the CPRE, the next decade will see that rate rise to a city the size of Greater London. Is this really what Britain wants? There is no turning back. Polling indicates a deep affection for visiting and enjoying the countryside among the majority of Britons. Yet there is no way for market pricing to reflect this preference. The delight given to walkers, cyclists, fishermen, cottage owners, even drivers, by the experience of the landscape is not quantifiable. It may lie easy on the human spirit or in the pen of a Wordsworth or a Ruskin. But such romanticism has language in common with market economics. Priorities must be determined by democracy. I notice that British politicians are tougher on the environment the farther that environment is from home. Mrs Thatcher worried about North Sea discharges. She was fierce on tropical rain forest and a tyrant in the upper atmosphere. But in the English countryside she was putty in the hands of the House

Builders Federation. The corniest reason for this disregard is that politicians (and the media) live in London. They do not go to the country except to nurse a constituency. They know the French or Italian landscape, since that is where they holiday. I doubt if one in a hundred MPs has actually seen the wind farms they vote through Parliament. One MP was enraged at the routing of a high speed train through the Dordogne Valley, yet unconcerned by the Winchester bypass. To an English politician the English provinces are a foreign country. i believe many Tory voters are vaguely ashamed of what was done to rural Britain in the 1980s. They hope a Labour vote will relieve their guilt, will expiate the unacceptable face of landscape laisser faire. They can pocket the cash and feel good by throwing the philistines out. New Labour, old guilt. But will new Labour honour the mandate, and stop wrecking rural Britain? The manifesto is silent. I ask, read and listen. But the noise of the hunt is elsewhere. Perhaps the tramp was right.

THERE is aftershave on the carpet in the world of men's magazines with the news that James Brown, the founding editor of Loaded, is off to edit GQ. It is as if the editor of the Daily Sport had been made editor of The Economist.

Brown, 31, launched his magazine in 1994 as the apotheosis of new laddishness with endless Page Three girls, footballers and backrow irreverence. The latest issue has features on the glamour model Joanne Guest in the skimpiest of warm-weather gear; on Manches-ter United and on lap-dancing in

The Conservatives prepare for Opposition

Seven days ago the Labour Party looked rattled: manifesto promises were rewritten and the opinion polls were slipping. It appeared just possible to Tory optimists that John Major might pull off an improbable victory. This week those hopes are ashes again. The Conservative Party is transforming itself around its policy towards Europe; some individual Tory MPs are more electable than they were; but the Government as a whole (if it can be called a whole) is massively less electable. For the Tories to win this election from here would require a miracle. Whether or not Tony Blair sits on Herr Kohl's knee, he will almost certainly be the one who meets the German leader in Amsterdam.

This has been a fundamental week in the history of the Conservative Party, a week that has summed up much about the failures of the last five years and the possibility of a brighter future. In a curious sense, the electorate has had more notice of what the party would do if it won the election after next than it does about this one. We have seen the future and it is profoundly sceptical. There remains, however, the small matter of May 1, 1997. Most Conservatives are now resigned, however reluctantly, to the probability of defeat. Some will secretly welcome it.

Defeat like death is not made easier by prior advertisement. It will be a traumatic experience for those who have sat for so long on the government benches. The Conservative Party has held power for 67 years since 1900: 18 of those in its current period of office. It is a measure of the Conservative command of this century, that it has been removed and replaced by a majority Liberal or Labour Administration on only three occasions. Each time, though, it took an additional election loss before the party regained

Conservatives are not comfortable creatures in opposition. In truth their record there is dismal. Until Margaret Thatcher, the Labour Party had largely dictated the direction of policy despite only two periods of secure majority government. In part this reflected the relative failure of the demoralised Tories. The Conservatives have usually blamed the public for ingratitude and then each other for incompetence. Too often, the party has conspicuously refused to analyse the reasons for its rejection.

Such an introspective performance after this polling day would not serve the national interest. The Labour Party has sailed through this campaign with much scrutiny but little clarity of response. When the spotlight has found its mark, the appearance has been often poor. Mr Blair has managed to square the messages of "time for a change" and "we will not change that much" without suffering for their contradictions. On Europe and numerous other questions he has retained a strategic ambiguity. There remains a large element of mystery about what he will claim for a mandate. In office, the country, indeed Labour itself, would need him to be tested by the Tories.

The Conservatives should recognise the sources of their past triumphs. From Lord Salisbury to Lady Thatcher these have been based on three factors. For at least one hundred years it has been the party of union and nation. This is not an aggressive or xenophobic force but one that appreciates the sense of identity in these islands. That appeal has allowed Conservatives to reach across class, creed, and constituencies. Second, the Tories have usually been more unified than their opponents. Not since 1846 have they formally split. Nor since 1906 has there been a real schism. Finally, the Conservatives have been able to claim competence in the exercise of power.

These elements have proved irreconcilable with membership of the ERM, the Maastricht treaty, and the prospective single currency. The party beyond Westminster has worked that out and declared independence from its hierarchy. The questions concerning the leadership or the timing of that contest are important but secondary to the Tories rediscovering their sense of place and purpose. There lies the road both to effective opposition and electoral restoration. This week may well have witnessed the end of an era. The Conservatives must look back as well as forwards to find their future.

A POLL FOR CHIRAC

The prospect of elections on both sides of the Channel

After days of rumour, leaks and innuendo, President Chirac is expected this weekend to decide a question of crucial importance to his authority and to the future of European economic and monetary union whether to early elections. Those urging him to do so were yesterday confident that they would prevail, and that a snap election will be called on June 1, with the second round a week later. Unusually, therefore, electioning may be in full swing on both sides of the Channel for the rest of this month.

President Chirac, who alone can call an election ahead of the scheduled date in March, now has overwhelming reasons for doing so. His popularity is still low, and Alain Juppé, his Prime Minister, remains one of the least popular in postwar politics. But the polls for both are improving. The Gaullists and their UDF allies in the 577-seat Assembly now have a massive majority, which M Chirac knows cannot be maintained. But he probably reckons that the loss of seats would be smaller now than later.

M Chirac is looking to both his Left and his Right. On the Left, the Socialists are in disarray. Still strongly associated with the Mitterrand era, they are blackened by association with the details now emerging of scandals and wrong-doing during the years of Socialist rule, especially the illegal telephone bugging of political opponents, journalists and celebrities.

The Gaullists are urging the Government to take advantage of this confusion. On the Right, the National Front presents a more potent threat. With a string of local victories. especially in the South, it is playing on racial prejudice, unemployment and a general malaise to present itself as a disciplined. force for the disaffected. The Government dissolve the National Assembly and call has no coherent strategy for bluming its appeal, and therefore believes that a quick election may catch the Right unawares.

> By far the strongest reason for holding elections now, however, is the iron logic of France's support for EMU. Figures leaked from the Finance Ministry recently show that next year France is likely to overshoot the Maastricht 3 per cent limit on budget deficits, with a deficit ranging from 3.8 to 4.5 per cent in the worst-case scenario. This will force the Juppé Government into a new and savage round of austerity cuts. If these are put in place this autumn, France is guaranteed another winter of discontent. To ask for voters' support two months later would be political suicide.

> The decision to call a pre-term election, however, is not easy. Because the electorate knows that M Chirac wants to secure a Gaullist majority to pave the way for harsh budget cuts, such a move could have the opposite effect, and bolster the Socialists. While nominally supporting EMU, they have recently added so many conditions that it would be almost impossible for the rest of the EU to proceed with the project. In calling an election, therefore, M Chirac would risk not only his party's majority but the future of his cherished EMU. And that, in turn, would have momentous consequences for the rest of Europe — not least, Britain.

BULLDOGS AND BLOODHOUNDS

All but the purists will welcome the new peers

For 21 members of the last House of Commons a permanent place in Parliament has already been assured. A score of retiring MPs, although the adjective may not seem altogether appropriate in the case of some such as Roy Hattersley, will be swapping the green benches for the red this May.

Her Majesty has decided to elevate to the peerage some of the last Parliament's most distinguished names, and some who are less well known outside the precincts of power but no less deserving of honour. For the rationalists of Charter 88 such whimsical exercise of the royal prerogative will offend against pure democratic principles. The rest of us, who can sleep happy at night despite the absence of a truly proportional voting system for the Ambridge Parochial Church Council, will be delighted to see these sage magnificoes saved for the nation. It-is difficult to devise a perfect second chamber, partly because the need for a revising house springs from a recognition of human imperfection. There is no Parliament, however elegant its voting system. however gifted at Politics. Philosophy and Economics its members, which cannot benefit from older heads tugging at the sleeve as the laws are framed. Those grave seniors need not be belied earls; indeed some of those who look at the world through mullioned windows and across broad acres are probably better employed cultivating land than a reputation for wisdom. Whatever their origins, a second chamber needs those for whom public service has been a vocation, not a career. Once ambition's embers have cooled then vesterday's ministers can be the shrewdest guardians of the constitution's health.

It is not only ministers whose contributions count. The Upper House will certainly benefit from the experience of Sir Patrick Mayhew and Douglas Hurd, who held high office without ever having given the impression of lusting for it. The second chamber should not, however, become an extension of the Cavalry and Guards' Club. The Lords also benefits by recruiting from the Sergeants' Mess and the awkward squad.

The presence in their Lordships' House of the gloriously and proudly proletarian Don Dixon may, at first, seem as incongruous as Paul Gascoigne at All Souls. But the former Labour MP for Jarrow and ruthless whip is an unalloyed asset. David Alton, although also once a whip, is of a very different pedigree. He is bloodhound to Dixon's bulldog. A determined, principled lone campaigner, he has forced Parliament to think hard on moral issues.

The House of Lords is flawed, anachronistic, eccentrically constituted, bizarrely ordered and the object of bewilderment abroad. Reform will come, sooner or later. The nature of change in the Lords is still a matter for dispute, but what should not be is the welcome due to its newest members.

Britain as 'a loser' outside Europe

From Mr Roy Hattersley, Lord Howe of Aberavon and Sir David Steel

Sir. Following the MORI poll reported in The Times on Thursday, it is important to underline the view of the three main political party leaders that Britain would be a loser outside Europe. We endorse that view.

Millions of British jobs depend on trade with Europe, trade which has flourished thanks to the EU's single market, the largest free-trade zone in the world. Leaving Europe would damage that trade, increase business costs, deter investment from abroad and jeopardise employment here in Britain. Britain's best opportunity to remain a global power is as a strong nation in a strong Europe. We should be leading Europe, not leaving it. Yours etc. ROY HATTERSLEY. GEOFFREY HOWE,

Election 97

From Mr Norman Jenkins

Sir. The more senior of my acquaintance, whatever their political leanings, appear in the main to accept the inevitability of a change of government. Not because the current one has necessarily failed us but because "It's Buggins's turn; let someone else have a go to see if it can be done better".

It can't - if history is anything at all to go by. The last socialist government had to be thrown out neck and crop; incapable of controlling its lunatic fringe, its disastrous policies made its downfall inevitable.

The achievement of the last 18 years has been slow, painful and step by step of necessity, modifying programmes as unforeseeable pressures arose. Today's level of achievement and stability is virtually unprecedented. A change of government would, I believe, subject both the achievement and its further development to un-

Yours very truly. NORMAN JENKINS. Whitehill. Ewshot, Farnham, Surrey. April 17.

From Mr H. S. Muirhead

Sir, A healthy democracy requires a realistic choice. The longer one party remains in power the greater the propensity, as in Japan, for "sleaze", complacency, a weak Opposition, and eventually an ineffective successor.

At each election the governing party must advance the stronger arguments in order to justify its re-election, rather than accepting "change for change's

By that criterion, the Tories do not impress; Labour seems sensible enough; Sir James Goldsmith offers a decision on Europe. In 1997 there seems no compelling reason to vote Tory.

Electoral law

From the Deputy Chief Executive of the London Borough of Camden

Sir, Camden Council will not be breaking electoral law (Diary, April 8) by displaying directions for voters in languages other than English or Welsh inside our polling stations.

The multi-lingual information will be outside polling stations — with the aim of including as many members of the local community as we can in the democratic process. That is perfectly in order under electoral law.

Yours faithfully, AMANDA KELLY. Deputy Chief Executive and Borough Solicitor. London Borough of Camden. Town Hall, Judd Street, WCl.

Church's obligations on baptism

From the Reverend J. D. Mitson

Sir, The Archbishop of Canterbury is quoted as saying (report, April 14) that parents who do not attend church should not be prevented from bringing children to baptism. In fact, of course, there is a legal obligation on clergy in the Church of England to baptise any child within their cure (canon B22).

Thus any minister who refuses a baptismal request simply because the parents do not attend church is misrepresenting the legal position. He is in breach of canon law and indeed the oath of canonical obedience taken by him both on ordination and on any appointment to the benefice.

Yours faithfully, J. D. MITSON (Registrar), Diocese of St Edmundsbury & Ipswich, 24-26 Museum Street, Ipswich, Suffolk.

From the Reverend Andrew P. de Berry

From the Secretary of the British Equestrian Trade Association

Sir, Mr Bernard Selwyn (letter, April 11) suggests that it would be helpful to have a detailed breakdown of employment figures in relation to country sports. Considerable research has recently been conducted on this issue.

Our 1996 survey showed that in the equestrian industry between 7,000 and 9,000 full-time jobs are directly dependent on fox hunting. These are jobs in retail saddlers, distributors and manufacturers of equestrian products, feed merchants, farriers, vets and riding establishments.

The Campaign for Hunting has established that 3,000 grooms are likely to lose their jobs should hunting be banned, while the Game Conservancy Survey of Hunts believes that the loss of a further 910 jobs, of those employed by the hunts themselves, will be the inevitable result of a ban. An estimated 1,000 jobs in hotels and garages, generated by hunts and their supporters, would also be affected.

Going wider than fox hunting, Cobham Resource Consultants produced a report earlier this year, which found that field sports generate direct employment equivalent to 60,160 fulltime jobs, with indirect employment equivalent to a further 30,809 jobs.

The last 'proper' cavalry charge

From the Marquess of Anglesey

Sir, General Friedberger's statement (letter, March 31; see also letters, April 5 and 8) that the 20th Hussars, at Gebze in Turkey in 1920, were the very last full regular British cavalry regiment to charge an enemy is unassail-

In deciding which were the last charges by auxiliary and irregular mounted units in the British service there are greater difficulties. These stem less from their dates than from the definition of the word charge. I take it to mean, for the purposes of this debate, an assault upon an armed enemy who makes an attempt to resist it. Whether it can be rightly called a charge when the enemy flees before any contact is made is a nice point. Mr John Lockwood (letter, April 8) may be correct in claiming that the two yeomanry regiments which formed part of the 5th Cavalry Brigade en-gaged in 1941 with the Vichy French in Syria were the last of the veomanry to charge. However, it has been generally accepted hitherto that the two regiments were on three separate occasions literally on the point of charging when the enemy decided to fly before the yeomanry's swords could perform their task. Mr Lockwood states that the French opened fire, but without more than slight effect.

Whether these qualify as charges proper or not, there are anyway three later claimants for the last charge. On March 19, 1942, north of Rangoon, a detachment of some 50 Sikhs of the Burma Frontier Force rode into an ambush. Rather than surrender to the Japanese, its leader, Captain Arthur Sandeman of the Central India Horse, decided to charge. Very few survived the enemy's machine-gun fire to tell the tale. That was without question a

In 1944 a squadron of the Gwalior
Lancers made what seems to have been a true charge in the Arakan re-gion of Burma, while in 1953 a section of Kenya's Northern Frontier Tribal Police charged a large, well-armed Mau Mau gang, killing the lot. Whether this was a military or a police action is a most point.

It looks therefore as if Sandeman's suicidal charge in 1942 and that of the Gwalior Lancers in 1944 must contend for the distinction of being the last British mounted charge - unless of course further evidence comes to

From Dr Douglas Stewart

Sir, Zebra crossings not only alert drivers (letters, April 16 and 17); their striped markings also provide a visual scale which aids judgment of distance to pedestrians, especially children.

Right for the job?

From Mr George Collard

Sir. The latest research appears to show that, in dealing with difficult sit-uations, the intuitive approach, or "gut reaction", produces better results than the practical, well thought out response.

Some years ago, the late Canon Professor H. E. W. Turner of Durham informed me that women were more intuitive creatures than men, who were more practical and methodical.

If both these propositions are true, wouldn't it be better if women were responsible for making all decisions and men responsible for carrying

Without words

From Mrs Judy Astley

Sir, Babyhood is not the only time that humans resort to communicating in sign language (article, April 15). Scientists would do well to come to my house and study "The teenager: nonverbal language skills".

The more common "signs" include the slouch n' scowl, which inevitably means denial, as in "No, of course I don't have any homework". Eyes to ceiling/despairing shake of head means "Parents are a sad waste of space".

Then there is the smile and hover technique, by which hanging around the kitchen, generously rinsing one plate and grinning in a sickly way can only be interpreted as "I require money".

OBITUARIES

Sir David ("Toby") Hildyard, KCMG, DFC, former British Permanent Representative to the United Nations in Geneva. died on April 5 aged 80. He was born on May 4, 1916.

Toby Hildyard's career reads like a chronicle of world politics since the Second World War. It culminated in 1975, one year before his retirement, when as head of Britain's delegation to the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE), he flew with Harold Wilson to Helsinki to sign the Final Act - one of the great treaty symbols of East-West detente. Only seven years before, he had been acting head of the British delegation at the UN in New York (in the absence of the Ambassador, Lord Caradon) at the time of the Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia. But if the UN provided one of the main strands in his career, another was formed by Hispanic affairs. His first appointment as head of mission in 1970 had been as British Ambassador in Santiago. No sooner had he arrived than Salvador Allende came to power as the Chilean President --the world's first democratically elected Marxist leader. Hildyard successfully forged a close personal and working relationship with Allende with at least one unexpected benefit for Britain.

In 1971, Sir Geoffrey Jackson, the British envoy in Uruguay, was kidnapped by the Tupamaros guerrillas, who demanded a large ransom for his release. It was President Allende, who, through his contacts Millio with left-wing groupings, opened a channel of communication with the terrorists for Hildyard. The latter subsequently held three secret meetings on behalf of the Government with Tupamaros leaders in Santiago, being driven blind-fold to meet them in the middle of the night. His task was complicated by Britain's persistent refusal to meet their demands. Nonetheless, Geoffrey Jackson was released after eight months.

Hildyard returned to this country in 1973, just before Allende's overthrow and death in a military coup. But Chile recognised his friendship is

SIR DAVID HILDYARD

Hildyard, extreme right, and Harold Wilson at the signing of the Final Act of the East-West détente treaty in Helsinki in 1975

years later by appointing him a Grand Official in its Order of Merit its highest civil honour.

David Henry Thoroton Hildyard was born in London, the son of a distinguished QC who later became a County Court judge in Nottingham after inheriting a 1,000-acre Nottinghamshire estate. Toby (as he was always known) went to Eton, where he played for the Oppidans in the Wall Game, and was one of the school's 22 leading cricketers. He also won a Timmis exhibition to Christ Church, Oxford, to read politics, philosophy, and economics. His tu-tors included Lord Longford, Sir Roy Harrod and A. J. Ayer.

Hildyard then travelled to German friend, Alexander Boeker, get away from the Third Reich before the outbreak of the Second World War. Boeker, who eventually reached the United States, was later to serve as the Federal German Republic's Ambassador to the UN.

Hildyard had learnt to fly with the Oxford University Air Squadron in the 1930s, so found himself in the RAF shortly after the war started. Posted to Coastal Command, he served in Gibraltar and North Africa before leaving for the Far East.

He spent much of his time with 202 Flying Boat Squadron in Ceylon, winning the DFC in 1943, after "an exceptionally long operational Germany, where he helped a young career". The citation referred to the "resourcefulness" shown by Flight Lieutenant Hildyard while on escort, anti-submarine, and maritime rescue sorties, and to the number of VIPs (including Lord Louis Mountbatten) whom he had ferried around the

> But the mission which attracted most attention was his intervention at Nancowry in the Nicobar Islands in the Indian Ocean. In an operation which was described by the Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden in the Commons, Hildyard and his crew snatched a small party of RAF personnel from the path of the advancing Japanese, then destroyed their base — including two wooden camps, power stations, radio transmitters, stores, dams, and 100,000 gallons of petrol. The Japanese arrived two days later.

Hildyard ended the war as a wing commander in Ceylon, in charge of the largest flying boat school in the

He attended the postwar Nuremberg trials after being commissioned by Whitehall intelligence to contrib-ute a short account of the war from a German perspective. Following a spell of ill-health, he entered the Foreign Office in 1948. A year after he paid his first visit to the UN General Assembly, acting as a secretary to the British legation.

Hildyard's early postings included Montevideo from 1950 and Madrid from 1953. He went to Mexico City as counsellor in 1960. Between 1965 and 1968 he was head of the Foreign Office's economic relations department - a period which included the devaluation of the pound by the Wilson Government. Then in 1968 he left for the UN as minister and deputy to Lord Caradon - a more than usually important post since Caradon was a political appointee and Hildyard was thus the senior diplomat in the legation.

His last post was as Permanent Representative (with the rank of ambassador) to the UN and other international organisations in Geneva. The other organisations then included not only CSCE but also the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (Gatt).

Toby Hildyard was a friendly, sociable man with a good mind, who was once described as the perfect diplomat. In retirement he worked briefly with Sir Roy Strong, helping to raise funds for the Victoria and Albert Museum. He also became a director of the Lombard Odier bank, but retired from these and other interests in his early seventies.

His wife Millicent, whom he married in 1947, was the widow of an old friend Wing Commander Richard Longmore. They met when he called on her after her husband had been killed in action in the war. She, their son and daughter, and a stepson and step-daughter from her first marriage, survive him.

JOANNA LEWIS

Joanna Lewis in the 1930s

Joanna Lewis, physiotherapist, died on April 2 aged 86. She was born on November 25, 1910.

IN THE prime of her career Joanna Lewis was an ardent campaigner for better postural awareness in Britain, which she had discovered was badly neglected by the medical profession and the fitness industry. Her book Fashion is Your Body (1974), co-authored with Molly Castle, explained the Scandinavian Mensendieck method of exercising, which had, in the 1950s, saved her from semi-paralysis brought on by a fall from a horse.

She was determined to spread the benefits of Mensendieck and went on to train as a teacher. In due course she founded the English School of Mensendieck.

Dr Bess Mensendieck had invented this new method of therapeutic exercising in the early years of this century she noticed how imperfect was the posture of many artists' models. Qualifying as a doc-tor, she developed a method of exercising individual and groups of muscles to improve posture and thus relieve neck tensions, backache, and fibrositis. She was famous in Hollywood, where stars such as Ingrid Bergman and Gloria Swanson followed her tech-

At the height of her career, Joanna Lewis taught Mensendieck classes and trained teachers in London. She also appeared in a regular slot during several series of Michael Aspel's BBC TV Afternoon Programme.

She was the eldest child of

grieved at having been parted from their pets after going into grand-daughter of John Bune, one-time chief of the parliaa home. The national hospital visiting scheme was a great mentary staff of The Times. She had been a talented pianist in her teens but was diverted from pursuing further musical study by marrying Stanley Hill at the age of 19. Until 1936, when she was widowed for the first time, she lived in Borneo as the wife of a district commissioner. There she galloped through the tropical forests, dodging monkeys which threw coconuts at her, and on one famous occasion nearly falling off her horse onto the top of a cobra. in 1939, on the eve of war. she married, secondly, a naval commander. They were apart for virtually the duration of hostilities. But in 1952 she returned to the Far East as the wife of the Captain of the Dockyard in Hong Kong.

Always interested in health (she was a founder member of the Soil Association), she had yet to find her true vocation. But if health was one of her watchwords, hospitality was another. in Hong Kong, as in Borneo, she was able to give full rein to her talents on land and sea - a barge, just fast enough for water skiing came with the Captain of the Dockyard's job. Thank you for being so kind to me on top of a mountain and under the sea," wrote one grateful guest after a memorable boat trip.

Joanna Lewis had suffered cracked vertebrae from a riding fall as a young woman. In middle age, the injury gave her trouble, and a London hospital warned her she might end up in a wheelchair. On a visit to Norway, she heard about the Mensendieck system and, back in London, consulted Harriet Nyemann. who had moved there from Denmark, where she had been "trained by Bess Mensendieck.

strengthened her lower back and she never became a cripple. Inspired by this experience, she decided to qualify and teach. Harriet Nyemann taught her in an all-female class of trainee teachers.

Joanna was undoubtedly the star pupil. "Watch Mrs Lewis," Harriet Nyemann constantly urged the class, until one of them, the daughter-in-law of the former Prime Minister, Andrew Bonar Law, cried out "Mrs Lewis, Mrs Lewis, I am sick of Mrs Lewis," But the two became firm friends, and over the years, the American-born Merrie Coleraine and her husband Lord Coleraine gave encouraged her to use their flat in Sloane Street as one of several teaching centres.

From 1972 she was established in Weymouth Street and the English school of Mensendieck flourished. One journalist who came to the classes was Prudence Glynn, then fashion editor of The Times, who wrote the foreword to Fashion is Your Body.

In retirement, Joanna Lewis liked nothing better than gathering friends around her for a spent as a victim of emphyse ma but she never had a sign of stiffness in her body. Although she could sometimes hardly walk for breathlessness, she could still touch her toes.

Her second husband predeceased her: she is survived by three sons, one from her first marriage and two from her

Lesley Scott-Ordish was born Lesley Adey in Solihull, Warwickshire, When she married Peter Ordish in 1953 she combined an old family name

In 1982 Scott-Ordish helped with the launch of another charity, Dogs for the Deaf. These specially trained animals will alert their owners when a phone or doorbell rings or when a pan boils over in the kitchen, for instance. On her marriage Lesley

Scott-Ordish bought a dog of her own for the first time, a cocker spaniel. In 1996 she published Cocker Spaniels: An Owner's Guide. But in latter years she had bred English setters. She herself bore a resemblance to this particular breed. She was tall, slim and elegant.

She is survived by her husband Peter and by their two sons.

ON THIS DAY

April 19, 1929

The multi-storey garage is now a feature of most British cities - but not with 27 floors and automated parking.

double-width lifts in a row at the end of the yard. Out of the lift a flat trolley, or tow-unit, is run by the liftman, who simply presses a button without moving from his position in the lift. When this tow-unit is underneath the car it is raised by the pressure of another button till it lifts the car right off the ground, it is then run back into the lift with the car on it. All this work is done by the lift operator, who does not move from his station in the lift. We now do what no car-owner is allowed to do, but what the writer had the privilege of doing, and get into the lift with the car. The lift man presses a button, the huge red doors close to, and in a dim half-light we go up, car and all, at the rate of a floor a second, till we reach the 24th floor. Here the doors are opened (again by button) and the car is run out of the lift into the garage on the little towunit till it reaches its appointed place. The top floor is smaller than the lower ones, because the New York Zoning Law necessitates the pyramiding of buildings after a certain ght, but it holds some 24 cars. The tow-unit is then run back into the lift, where it is taken down to begin its job over again. Each tow-unit is attached to its own lift (two to a lift) and runs on grooves, which continue outside the lift on to the garage floors.

Meantime the chauffeur has been given a check which tells him that his car will be kept there for whatever time he has specified. The rate of garaging depends on whether the car will be wanted at a moment's notice, when it is put in a front row, or whether the owner is villing to wait some time for it. In this 27-storey building, with its space for 1,250 cars, there are only 12 operatives engaged in garaging cars — an average of one man to 100 cars. There are, however, others employed solely in washing and cleaning cars. In a basement room in by "daylight" mercury vapour lamps, making their lips look violet and their faces blue, two men are washing a car ...

Co-op injunction forces Regan to de

By Jason Nissé

ANDREW REGAN, the 31year-old entrepreneur, was yesterday forced to postpone his planned £1.15 billion bid for the Co-operative Wholesale Society after the CWS obtained an injunction against the use of supposedly confidential information passed to Mr Regan by Allan Green, CWS's retail chief.

Galileo, a special purpose company backed by Mr Regan's Lanica Trust, was set to reveal details of a two-stage offer for CWS when the injunction was granted. the injunction lifted. A spokesman said Galileo still intends

Galileo is due in court on Tuesday, when it hopes to have to make an offer for CWS. This is a distracting and frustrating action."

Lanica, whose shares were suspended in February when news of its interest in CWS first leaked, told the Stock Exchange via its advisers. Hambros and HSBC James Capel, that it was about to make an announcement about the bid yesterday morning.

But nothing appeared until nearly 6pm when Galileo said it had been "prevented from making its proposals public today as planned as a result of being served with an injunc-tion obtained by CWS".

The injunction, granted by Mr Justice Lightman, prevented Mr Regan, his business associate David Lyons, Lanica, Galileo and Mr Green who on Thursday was sus-pended by CWS with his colleague, David Chambers from using any CWS confidential information.

> Mr Lightman listed confidential documents that the defendants must return to CWS by Tuesday. These include board and strategy papers. management accounts, profit forecasts, legal and financial advice given by outside advisers and computer disks containing membership details.

The court heard of a conversation between Alan Prescott. CWS's controller of production and property, and Mr Green on Thursday in which Mr Green was challenged about the disappearance of internal documents. After that meeting Mr Green, who was paid £240,000 by the CWS last year, was suspended as well as Mr Chambers, whose salary exceeded £200,000.

Galileo, which is also backed by Schroders Investment Management, Jupiter Tyndall and Killik & Co, was set to bid £1.15 billion for the whole of CWS before the injunction. It planned to offer each of CWS's 300,000 active members £1,000 each for the business, with larger payments to 300 corporate members.

To make this offer Galileo needs to convert CWS to a public limited company and it was hoping to call an extraordinary general meeting. This needs the support of at least corporate members. Galileo yesterday said it had sufficient backing, and enjoyed a great deal of support from within the CWS. However, CWS insiders noured scorn on the bidding structure, pointing out that CWS has two million members and the Co-operative Movement has eight million.

To convert CWS to a plo would need the support of 75 per cent of members and the approval of the Registrar of Friendly Socities. Graham Melmoth, CWS's chief executive, said the CWS's 30-strong board had unanimously rejected talks with Mr Regan. The members commanding 70 per cent of CWS votes.

mercenary allegations

By ROBERT MILLER

RUPERT McCOWAN, a director of Jardine Fleming, the Hong Kong investment bank. has been suspended after allegations were made linking him to the mercenaries hired by the government of Papua New Guinea (PNG).

A spokesman for JF, in which Robert Fleming, the UK private merchant bank, has a 50 per cent stake, said that during a commission of inquiry into the hiring of the mercenaries, who were led by Colonel Tim Spicer, a Briton. it had been alleged that Mr McCowan had helped to raise funds for the mercenary force. then transferred the money to a Hong Kong bank account

The JF spokesman added: "Allegations have been made to the commission which are both very, very specific and, if accurate, very serious. We have asked an independent law firm to investigate and priate that Mr McCowan be Mr McCowan worked as an adviser to PNG on the flotation last year of the stateowned Oregon Mines. Jardine Fleming was responsible for handling the global placement of the Oregon shares, over which there were allegations of share misplacements. Salomon Brothers subsequently cleared JF of any wrongdoing.

His basic salary increased to £294,000 from £265,000. There was also a profit-related bonus of £334,000, increased from £241,000 previously. Pension contributions rose to £314,000 from £251,000, according the the company's report and accounts, published yesterday.

Mr Bright built up Independent from a privately owned business into a publicly listed company worth more than £325 million within a decade. In line with company policy, Mr Bright was granted no share options last year. Garth Ramsay, chairman of Independent and a member of the remuneration committee, said the increases were justified because Independent's pre-tax profits had risen 46 per cent to £40 million.

He added: "Shareholders are pleased with our progress and we have never had a complaint about directors' pay." In the past year Independent shares have risen sharply from 45bp to 71312p.

Racal issues second warning

BY PAUL DURMAN

RACAL Electronics has issued its second profits warning in five months, prompting its shares to fall 12 per cent to 2431 ap.

Racal said its data products arm, which makes devices to help computers to communicate with one another, will lose £7 million in the six months to March 31. In December the company said this business would show a return to modest profits.

One cynical investor, a veteran of past disappointments, said: "That's what Racal does, isn't it? Another large institution suggested it was time for Sir Ernest Harrison, Racal's chairman, to think about selling the group, following the example of his recent £1.2 billion sale of Chubb Security to Williams Holdings. The security business was once part of Racal. Racal now expects to report annual pre-tax profits of about £40 million — £30 million less than its target last June. David Elsbury, chief executive, blamed the loss on a three-month delay in launching a key product. Racal needed extra time to straighten out bugs in 350,000 lines of computer code. Mr Elsbury said: "It's not bad news, it's a slight delay. Paul Kozlowski has done a fantastic job turning this division around." He said 1997 would be a turning point, with all Racal's businesses "beginning to sing from the same songsheet for the first time in five years". Racal did not intend to break itself up - an idea often floated in the City. Mr Elsbury added: "We believe that the inherent value in the Racal share

price is far higher than the break-up

values being suggested." He said these range from 300p to 450p a share. Racal said its two principal businesses in network services, its telecommunications arm and defence electronics, both performed well. Other parts of the group experienced difficult trading conditions.

Minerva rise

Minerva, the newly floated property group, made a pre-tax profit of £8.5 milion in the six months to January 31. The results, which compare to a £2.2 million loss in the same period last year, include about four months prior to last November's listing. Minerva is advising on Government's DSS property portfolio, comprising 700 buildings. If the Mapeley Holdings consor-tium wins, it will act as property development partner alongside Burford and Argent. There is no interim dividend.

Regalian deal

Regalian Properties has bought an office, retail and Odeon cinema complex at Marble Arch, London, for an estimated £20 million. It includes 88,000 square feet of offices, 20,000 square feet of shop space and 43,000 square feet of basement car park. The offices will be refurbished in an attempt to woo international companies seeking relatively small London headquarters.

Peek tumbles

Peek shares lost 42 per cent of their value after the traffic control systems company warned investors it was heading for a half-year loss of £1.5 million. However, Peek forecast a recovery in the second half. The shares, which traded at 130p a 31 2p at 44p.

BT coup outflanks arch-rival

IN MADRID

BRITISH Telecom scored a victory yesterday over AT&T. its American arch-rival, when it lured Telefonica of Spain into its $30 billion global partnership with MCI. BT. which is taking a £280m stake in Teleionica, said the accord provides access to the fast-growing Latin American market expected to be worth about $60 billion by 2000. Telefonica, the world's ninth largest phone company, is the leading supplier of telecom services to the Spanish-speaking world. It has controlling stakes or equity investments in Chile, Peru, Argentina, Brazil and Puerto Rico. In Latin America. Telefonica has more than ten million phone lines in service, almost a million mobile-phone companies and more than a million cable TV customers.

The immediate defection of Telefonica from Unisource, AT&T's alliance of European phone companies, is expected to trigger a significant global telecoms realignment.

With Telefonica at its side, Concert, as the BT-MCI alliance will be known, will be able to sell voice, data, video and Internet services to many of the largest Spanish and Latin American corporations. The Telefonica alliance is wide-ranging and will trigger billions of pounds of invest-

HELENE, the clothing group, plans to cancel its listing on the London Stock Exchange after breaking off talks with Dyckhoff, the German retailer, about a reverse takeover (Sarah Cunningham writes).

Helene, whose shares were suspended at 6p six months ago after it reached an initial agreement with Dyckhoff, ended talks after the German company sought court protec-tion from its creditors last month. Dyckhoff is controlled by Harold Tillman, who last year overturned a DTI disqualification as a company director. Three Helene subsid iaries are still trading and the board is discussing their future with their management.

SE moving towards greater transparency

By Adam Jones

THE Stock Exchange took a makers. The SIB also made it huge stride yesterday towards clear that it wanted greater freeing itself of allegations that it allows market-makers too great an influence.

The Exchange said it aims to remove rules that allow publication of some share deals to be delayed up to five days. All trades through its new order book being introduced in October will have to be announced immediately.

Earlier plans for order-driven trading had included a delayed publication compo-nent to avoid frightening away big buyers and sellers. This led to criticism from MPs, who accused the Exchange of bowing to pressure from market

Richard Kilsby, the Ex-change's director of market services, said immediate publication would reassure clients that the quote they were getting in the market was the latest price. The change was possible because Exchange members have become more confident about the worked trade system that will exist alongside the order book. This will allow a degree of secrecy while a big trade is going through. Details are still being worked out but it is likely to apply to deals six to ten times larger than average.

BUSINESS ROUNDUP

Housebuying season enjoys steady start

THE traditional spring start to the housebuying season was stendy rather than spectacular. The Building Societies Association (BSA) said yesterday that net advances in March, which included Easter, rose to £902 million from a depressed £670 million in February. Gross advances increased to £3.1 billion from £26 billion, while approvals totalled £3.5 billion from £26 billion. While approvals totalled £3.5 billion from £30 billion (February: £2.8 billion). Adrian Coles, director general of the BSA, said: "The growing signs of health in the housing market are increasing the prospects for the sustainable growth in lending, transactions and prices in 1997."

Eagles AIM is £750,000

SHEFFIELD EAGLES, the rugby league club, is raising £750,000 through a floration on the Alternative Investment Market, which will value the company at £3.9 million. The money is to fund the recruitment of players. The company is controlled by Paul Thompson, chief executive of Sanderson Electronics, who is underwriting the placing. He owns a 62.5 stake and is not selling any shares. Eagle pic is placing 2.25 million shares at 40p, with dealings beginning on May 21.

Hearts to diversify

HEART OF MIDLOTHIAN, the Edinburgh football club that is joining the stock market, is considering a move into basketball, hockey or rubgy when it completes its new stadium. The club, which is raising £5.1 million to complete work on the stadium, does not intend to restrict itself to soccer. Hearts will be valued at £14.2 million, with shares placed at 140p. The club made a loss of £855,000 before tax in the eight months to January 31. Shares begin trading on May 19.

Northern Foods deal

NORTHERN FOODS has bought the Scottish Pride UHT milk business from the receivers for £8 million. The sale follows that of Scottish Pride's fresh milk business to Robert Wiseman Dairies for £4.8 million. The UHT business employs 118 and had turnover of £30 million last year. Northern Foods, which will also pay for stock at valuation, said the processing plant in Kirkcudbright, Dumfries and Galloway will become part of its own Northern Dairies UHT operation.

Beales issues warning

SHARES of Beales Hunter, the refrigeration and electrical equipment group, fell to 126p from 149p after it said profits for the year to May would fall short of expectations and would include a £500.000 exceptional charge. A number of large industrial contracts have suffered delays and business with food retailers has fallen. However, the company said trading in the electrical and textile divisions has been in line with expectations. and the board intends to maintain the final dividend at 7.80.

Wednesday Thursday |

IN THE notoriously Tuesday stuffy world of insur-ance. Michael Bright is an unusual chief executive. Laddish, charismatic and, unlike many in his circle. without the advantage of a privileged background, the 52-yearold founder of Independent Insurance is as happy serving cocktails for big names in the industry as he is cheering Manchester United from his box at Old Trafford.

A working-class boy made good, Bright and ten other founders started independent ten years ago with an investment of EISO,000 between them, including £50,000 of Bright's own money. He has built the business from scratch into a hugely successful quoted company. It has bucked the trend in the insurance industry and made profits even during downward cycles in insurance rates.

With Bright's achievements have come the trappings of success - a London flat. a country home, a motor yacht, his beloved E-type Jaguar, holidays in the Bahamas, private education for his two children and a salary of £969,000 last year. The company was floated in November 1993 with a price tag of £98.5 million and an issue price of 225p per share. It is now worth £325 million and the shares are at

Last month, the company shone in the trou-bled general insurance general insurance sector by unveiling 1996 profits up 21 per cent. Bright does not play by normal rules. When the company floated, the perks in his three-year contract included a company profit scheme, a home entertainment allowance, phone bills at his home, and university fees and student accommodation paid for his two children. In 1995 his service contract was changed. Now any benefits are included in a taxable package. He is currently on a three-year rolling contract, but it does not contain a built-in "golden handshake" if he leaves the company.

"I am pleased with what I have achieved, but I like to think I've kept my feet on the ground," says Bright. "Anyway, my kids (aged 25 and 27) take the mickey out of me all the time, so I've no opportunity to become smug. One of the problems is you need to keep perspective. it would be all too easy to start believing

Bright is an early riser. He is at the office by 7am every weekday, and leaves at 3.30pm to head home for a nanfollowed by entertaining on four evenings. On Sundays, he does an hour's work before the rest of the family gets up. His home computer is linked to Independent's mainframe.

He has turned Independent into a tightly managed niche player, focusing on the UK market and dealing with only 20 per cent of brokers. It is now a successful fire, accident and motor insurance business, which specialises in unusual risks, including classic cars and high-risk

Bright has upset other insurers, talking outspokenly about falling motor rates at a time when the industry was trying to talk them up. He is also famous in the industry for having refused for two years to do business with Sedgwick, one of the biggest insurance brokers in the world. because he regarded its cash settlement as too slow. Asked about this he will only say: "It is not for me to comment."

Industry insiders admire the nerve of the man from nowhere who took on the big boys and won. They describe him variously as "a maverick", "impossibly demanding", "a breath of fresh air" and "a tremendous businessman", but all covet his lifestyle.

One says: "He leaves the office in the middle of the afternoon and takes the day's business home with him, so while the rest of his staff are working away at the office until 8pm, he's sipping a gin and tonic on his balcony and making more business phone calls."

Certainly, Independent, which is based at Minster Court in the City of London, has a reputation of paying among the best salaries and bonuses, but working its staff hard. "He has a reputation as infuriating to work for," one insider says of Bright. "He is very demanding and regarded by the rest of the industry as a hit of a maverick, but he's a shrewd businessman, and if he wasn't in insurance, he'd have made a success of some other enterprise." Bright has kept his shareholders happy. Independent's stock has trebled since 1995, and his own 5 per cent stake is now worth £15 million. He confirms that he is a tough boss. saying: "I get in early, look through the news on the Reuters screen, check through the previous day's business. By the time the rest of the staff get in. I know all about their recent performance. That creates a nice tension. "I don't pretend to work 9 to 5. Having a flat near work has made a big difference to my life. I don't understand how other people can cope with the grind of commuting. I work flat out from 7am to 3.30pm and then I'm shattered. I go home and have an hour's sleep. That gives me a renewed burst of energy."

His evenings in London are spent entertaining brokers and clients, and observers believe that it is this personal contact that is the secret of his success. He also brings his senior staff to his home in pain". During these weekends his wife, Katie, cooks for them while he conducts an intense review of their business figures. Kent is also where Bright relaxes. where he likes to "slob around in casual clothes, potter in the vegetable garden, read, and drive my Jag". His father was the director of a fuel distribution company. After leaving school at 16 with 5 O levels, Bright flirted briefly with a career in engineering, which he hated, before replying to a small advertisement in the local paper to work for Royal Insurance in Bromley. He was immediately accepted: "It's ironic that with those qualifications no one would even consider me for a job in insurance now," he says. "I doubled my money overnight. I was living in Bromley so I didn't have the cost of rail fares, and they were paying me £520 a year."

He studied for insurance qualifications and in the mid-Sixties left to join the National Coal Board, where aged 21 he met Katie, who was the same age. They married a year later. He then moved on to work for Orion Insurance.

The couple will celebrate their 30th wedding anniversary in July. "Katie and I moved every two-and-a-half years for ten

By that time, he had developed a taste for insurance. "Numbers fascinate me, and I love what I do," he says. "What other job can you be assessing risk at the Jubilee Line extension one day, and on a motor racing track the next? It's about real life." In 1982 he joined Lombard Elizabethan Insurance as director and in a fashionable, dynamic, young and progressive com-general manager. Four years later, at 42, he had a call from Ian Noble, of Noble and Co, the Scottish banker, to set up an insurance company. The plan was to create a Scottish insurance operation to dent. Bright was headhunted to become chief executive. "I said I'd do it, but I wouldn't live in Scotland," he recalis. The challenge was that "very few people have the chance to start with a clean sheet of paper". He added that, as the founders put up a lot of their own money, their minds were suitably focused. Historically, insurance companies have high costs and huge volumes of paperwork. Independent was born in the computer age, and has software that can calculate the profit and loss account on a daily basis.

To establish the business, Bright travelled the country in a campaign bus serving tea and rolls to brokers through-out Britain to try to persuade them to place business with the new company. "At first they laughed at us," says Bright, "but then they saw that we were serious." It was in the beginning, and, he says, still is, very hard work".

The company grew organically, until, in 1994, Bright pulled off a deal that industry observers describe as "a real coup". He bought the ongoing UK business of Aegon Insurance Group, a purchase that has brought Independent premium income even during difficult nsurance cycles, and in 1995 expanded Bright plans "to do even more with the company in the next ten years", and it is here that analysts express their reservations. "His management style is fine for a small company, but I would have doubts about how successfully he could handle a large company," one analyst said. "He brings in business by personal contact and entertaining, but if the company gets too big, that won't be viable any more."

Bright, however, remains unperturbed by the doubts: "My style is hands-on, but so are the managers who work for me. I have 35 to 40 managers who eat the rest of the world for breakfast."

Company kicks off art events with a load of old rubbish

or the first art exhibi-tion in its Battersea Bridge premises. Claydon Heeley International, a marketing consultancy, has chosen a young Japanese installation artist, Tomoko Takahashi, to spread rubbish all over the floor. In the spirit of contemporary art appreciation, the company has opened up its work space to this deluge of cigarette butts, old sandwich packets, bits of discarded paper, worn out computers. a pair of jeans, empty packets of Aspirin, old Pepsi cans, crisp packets, old pizza boxes, probably old pizzas too, and assorted other oddities.

The idea is that the office, redesigned last year by England Innes Architects, is to host a new art exhibition every five or six weeks. around which employees must get on with their snapadvertising thoughts from Monday to Friday, and Joanna Pitman on a marketing consultancy that intends to stage exhibitions in its office public at weekends. The first choice of artist in the series has caused something of a stir. Miss Takahashi arrived at Claydon Heeley in January to size up the venue. She was taken aback by the industry of the office - and the amount of rubbish produced. So to put across this astonishment, she decided to collect all the rubbish over a period of about six weeks and then, for the exhibition, to bring it back and spread it all over the floor. She says: "I started collecting the pieces in January. I washed the dirty things and then I decided to scribble over all the words on the paper 1 had. So 1 scribbled over every word or letter in about five days - four full days over Easter and then quite a few evenings too. I placed the rubbish on the floor -- it might look just scattered any old how, but each piece is carefully placed in a particular position. I taped bits and pieces up on the walls, I taped over the TV screens and I scribbled over the brand labels. It was a lot of work, but I'm very pleased with the result."

And why does Claydon Heeley want to indulge, for five weeks, in gazing at its own rubbish? The grand scheme behind it, says Gillian Dunn, art consultant to the company, is that acquired artwork would be-

pany such as this. So a series of art shows, staged fresh every five weeks, would altwo weeks. Then the actual ways be at the cutting edge. installation. Well, that took would always inspire anew. So far the rubbish seems to have inspired a certain amount of laughter and, as time goes by and the pizza boxes begin to smell, a fair amount of abuse. Miss Takahashi is unperturbed. They make fun of me, yes. But they are not nasty. Some of them think it's quite funny. You don't take it seriously? But it is totally serious. Very serious. I wanted to describe just how people work here. What the place is like when it's alive

Institutions bid up to 520p for Alliance shares

THE clamour by institutional investors for shares in the Alliance & Leicester ahead of Monday's stock market flotation looks likely to result in a bigger than expected windfall for the building society-turned-bank's members.

On offer were 52 million shares, or 9 per cent. As bidding got under way at 4.30pm in the first of the institutional auctions, fund managers were reported to be offering up to 520p a share—way above earlier estimates of between 502p and 505p. That would place the group on a price/earnings multiple of 12.5 and value the company at £3.05 billion.

More importantly, it will provide a windfall for the A&L members of £1,300. Brokers pointed out that the bids will have to be averaged out and the final figure may be somewhat lower, with another two auctions planned. But with the A&L likely to become a constituent of the top 100 companies almost immediately, institutional demand for the stock is expected to remain high.

Share prices generally traded in narrow limits for much of the session before responding to an opening rise by the Dow Jones industrial average. They closed at their best of the day in thin trading. The FT-SE 100 index closed 11.6 up at 4.310.5. Despite this week's continuing volatility on Wall Street, the FT-SE 100 rise on the week was 39.8.

Zeneca put in a late run, closing 48p higher at £18.34 as the old stories about a bid for the company were revived. It looks as though one market-maker is feeling the squeeze and may be having trouble in covering an open position. Turnover was on the low side at 1.44 million shares.

Standard Chartered jumped 27p to 892p amid claims that Cazenove, the broker, was recommending the shares.

Northern Ireland Electricity rose 11p to 391p as SBC Warburg, the broker, raised its target price for the shares from 380p to 400p. But the rest of the electricity companies ran into profit-taking. Several brokers have been pushing the sector of late for its defensive qualities and strong yields. National Power lost 5½p at 523½p and Scottish Hydro 9½p at 380p.

There are changes afoot in the building sector. On MonEverything is coming up roses for William Sinclair, including its share price. It closed 9p up at 250p yesterday, against 185p changed hands. On Tuesday, the group's American management rattled British fund managers by cutting the dividend from 7p to 4.3p and proceeding with its share buyback programme.

Probably the best performance of the week was recorded in Optometries, the scientific instruments supplier, where the price more than doubled from IIp to 25<sup>1</sup>ap. A consortium of private inves-

day. Camas and Bardon, the quarrying companies, agreed to tie the knot in a deal worth £540 million. The new company will be called Aggregate Industries and will be Britain's fifth largest supplier. Camas ended '2p firmer at 96p, while Bardon was unmoved at 46<sup>1</sup>2p.

News of the merger came as bad news for speculators who had bought into Bruntcliffe Aggregates, unchanged at

John Coleman, the new chief executive at House of Fraser, was given a cautious reception by brokers on Thursday after the group plunged into the red. It announced losses of £38 million following exceptional write-offs totalling £53.2 million. Coleman was upbeat about prospects, but could not convince the City. He has vowed to resign if plans for the future fail. The shares ended unchanged yesterday at 165p.

Reporting yesterday. Liberty, the stores group, marked time at 370p after returning to the black and maintaining the dividend. The group, headed by David Cassidy, chairman, and lan Thomson, managing director, last year closed all its provincial stores. It is redeveloping its flagship store in London's Regent Street.

Treasury 8 per cent 2015 finished £12 lower at £1091322 as a meagre 34,000 contracts were completed. Treasury 8 per cent 2015 fell £12 to £103532, while Treasury 8 per cent 2000 was three ticks off at £10234.

Distress beacons light up

OH DEAR, Racal Electronics has tripped over its own feet again. This time the problem is in the data products arm, a familiar underachiever. At the last profits warning, all of four months ago, data products were a little beacon of hope and were on course to make a modest second-half profit. This promise started depreciating only a few weeks later, when Racal missed a product launch. Lost sales and the E5 million spent on fixing the software means data products will now make

E7 million in the second half.

Racal portrays this as a great shame but no tragedy: the group's network services and defence electronic businesses are performing well. It will all come good soon — just you see. This breezy optimism is dismally familiar. Racal's upbeat view of the world can be seen in its explanation of the data product problems. It seems the "modest profits" forecast really meant break-even, and the additional software development spend doesn't really count, so Racal only missed its target by £2 million. The reality is, Racal was three months late launching products whose commercial life is often less than a year long. That is not good enough when it is up against fearsome American competition.

The latest collapse in the share price will set

The latest collapse in the share price will set the familiar hares running. Sir Emie Harrison is preparing to retire and/or break Racal up. Racal's share of the £2 billion Bowman military contract and the potential of its telecoms make it worth far more than last night's £700 million. Taking Racal at its word, the shares look good value at 243½ p., but it could be a long haul while the company rebuilds City trust.

Chemring

AFTER months of steadily gliding downwards. Chemring's shares have gone into a dive. Not even the prevailing scepticism had allowed for the dismal picture presented yesterday.

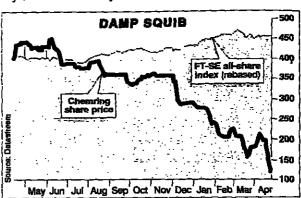

Long suspected by critics the admission finally came that the market for aircraft missile decoys has shrunk and is unlikely to recover to its former self.

Chemring is now swallowing its pride and embarking on a wholesale clear out, selling everything from its fireworks arm to its head office to raise cash to avoid buckling under the weight of its mounting debts.

Concentrating all the expensive horrors into six months will not be pleasant to watch: as a desperate seller, Chemring is unlikely to fetch good prices for any of the assets on the auction block. But admitting a crisis and downsizing to reflect the drop in demand is a better idea than carrying on under the delusion that the slump in decoy orders is merely a delay, with a boom around the corner.

However, fighter aircaft cannot function without decoys, and there are only three producers of such decoys in the world. If a leaner, more agile Chemring can stay affoat during the lulls, a smaller, leaner market will still be there for it. But it is too soon to mark the company down as a recovery stock. Much rests on the success of the disposals. Shareholders have suffered too much to jump out now.

Alliance

ITS NAME is instantly familiar. But even smarter investors may not know much about the Alliance & Leicester. Here are a few salient facts.

The A&L can trace its origins back to 1853. Its history since that time has been of successive mergers. culminating in the purchase of Girobank in 1990. The A&L is Britain's sixth-largest mortgage provider, with a market share of 4.1 per cent. But it has ambitions beyond home loans. After flotation, it intends to develop its commercial lending activities, using the Girobank brand. It will also enter the lucrative personal pensions market, untainted by the scandal that has hit many of the other

So far, so good, But the picture is not all rosy. Take its cost ratio of $1 per cent. This compares unfavourably with the go-ahead Northern Rock, whose cost ratio is 33 per cent.

The A&L has pledged to reduce this ratio. Observers believe that this can only be accomplished by job losses. Significantly, the A&L has made no job commitments.

It is also hard to see how A&L can expand, given the legislative bar on takeovers. A bid would be a gamble for A&L because it would be immediately exposed to a predator. But for shareholders, a bid would be the best ending of the A&L's 144-year story. Analysts believe that an aggressor would have to pay as much as 685p. A fair return for a £100 investment with the society.

Liberty

DRAGGING Liberty into the late 20th century was hound to be a difficult task. While the group clearly needed to be thoroughly modernised, it could not afford to lose its old-fashioned and exotic charm.

The latest figures suggest that the strategy adopted by the new management team is working. Sales growth has moved into double figures.

There is also promising news on the heritage front. Liberty is putting its archives on CD-Rom, which should ensure that the designs which are at the heart of the group are preserved and may be provided.

Efforts to leverage the brand have shifted abroad. The provincial shops have gone, while the airport shop chain is to be expanded overseas and a new branch opened in downtown Tokyo. Although earlier Liberty forays abroad ended badly, a cautious approach should bring rewards.

The company is still 44 per cent family owned, while 17 per cent is held by Bryan Myerson's UK Active Value fund. There is so little liquidity that only the house broker follows the stock. Scarcity has helped the shares to achieve a heady rating, but holders have not seen the

immediately can make best use of the cash

fter months of disputes and controversy the Alliance & Leicester, the UK's fourth-biggest building society, makes its stock market debut on Monday. Cazenove, the broker acting on behalf of the society, says about 600,000 members will sell their shares immediately, making between £1.200 and £1,300, releasing more than £700 million in to the economy.

An analysis by Nikko Europe, the securities house, based on previous takeovers of building societies, shows that two thirds of the money will be saved, leaving one third to be spent. Nikko believes this money will be spent on holidays, home improvements, jewellery and clothing.

Those who have opted to sell straight away may be wondering what is the most costeffective way of using their cash. Here The Times considers the options:

Many will be searching out the next society likely to succumb to a takeover or become a quoted company, especially in the light of remarks this week from John Burke, chief executive of the Bristol & West Building Society. Mr Burke expressed interest in taking over another society once the Bristol & West passes into the control of the Bank of Ireland. The Halifax Building Society is seen as another predator once it joins the stock market. This means that, regardless of their outspoken commitment to mutuality, larger societies remain bid targets. Remember that all the societies now in the process of floating and becoming banks once pledged undying commitment to mutual-The diehards are the Nationwide (minimum investment in a share account with membership rights is £500) the Bradford & Bingley (£500) the Britannia (£2,000), the Yorkshire (£1,000), the Birmingham Midshires (£1,000). the Portman (£100), the Coventry (£100), the Skipton (£2,000), the Leeds & Holbeck (£1,000) cost-effective. Homeowners pondering this, should make sure they do not incur any penalties for paying off some of their loan. Many borrowers with fixed-interest and discounted mortgages will be charged a redemption fee on partial repayment. John Charcol, the mortgage broker, points out that a borrower four years into a £50,000 loan over 25 years could save £9.42 a month by paying off £1,200, provided that no redemption penalties are incurred - a

the monthly payments at £338, thus repaying the loan a year early and saving £3,625.

have received their free shares. For those with £1,200 to save, MoneyFacts, the savings information guide, recom-mends an instant access account with Co-operative Bank, which pays annual interest of 5 per cent. Sainsbury's Bank, an offshoot of the supermarket chain, offers interest of 5.75 per cent on its instant access account, First National, an Irish Republic building society, offers two postal accounts paying 5 per cent. First Nathas ambitions to demutualise, but UK savers would not have membership rights and would be excluded from any payouts.

■ Those who are prepared to lock up their savings could take out a tax-exempt special savings account (Tessa), if they do not already have one. Tessa interest is paid free of tax provided the capital remains untouched for five years. The Labour Party has said that it would not abolish Tessas, but there is no guarantee that this tax-free shelter will remain available. Best Tessas include those offered by the Birmingham Midshires, the Holmesdale, the Principality and the Melton Mowbray.

For those with less patience, Moneyfacts suggests the Nationwide Building Society's 7 per cent fixed rate bond or the Bristol & West's Year Plus Bond, which offers 7.05 per cent interest.

Market forces to boost price

emand for shares in the Alliance & Leicester seems set to be strong on Monday, when the society finally reaches the market. Despite more than one quarter of A&L shareholders having cho-sen to sell their shares immediately, brokers believe that institutional demand for the shares will outstrip supply.

The unwanted shares are being sold off in a series of three auctions held by Cazenove — the first of which

The original estimate for the share price was 480p, but brokers are now revising this up to 520p per share, bringing the average payout to £1,300. After the initial burst of activity, the share price is likely to be further boosted by the index-tracking funds which will buy the shares when the

New government, new taxes

ecisions by millions of people about what to do with windfall shares or cash from converting building societies and insurance companies are becoming critical to manag-ing the economy after the election. No one is sure whether billions will be spent, or used to replenish credit lines. A year or so ago, when the economy was growing below forecast, bullish City economists were looking to the recipients of cash from Cheltenham & Gloucester and National & Provincial to boost consumer spending. Now that worries focus on overheating, the more fashionable line is that investors in Alliance & Leicester, Halifax and Woolwich will keep their shares or reinvest cash. The question resurfaced when returns from the A&L suggested that nearly a quarter of the 2.3 million people each entitled to between £1,200 and £1,300 worth of shares wanted cash as fast as possible. That was a lot more than Halifax research had suggested. Eight years ago, a quarter of Abbey National's initial shareholders had sold after a year, which seems more sensible.

One reason for hanging on to anything but a tiny holding is the prospect that fund managers who need such big index stocks might bid prices up to prise shares out of private investors' hands. Another reason is that newly floated groups can exploit the advantages they sought in converting. And some will be caught up in mergers to consolidate the financial services industry.

For economists, the issue is not whether people sell, but whether they spend the cash. This has become more urgent because the debate over policy after the election has hotted up. Whoever became Chancellor, the argument went, was expected to accede to Eddie George's demand for higher base rates. By year's end, rates might have moved from 6 to 7 per cent. Labour's Gordon Brown would want to establish credibility fast.

The argument changed after sterling started rising last autumn. This week it regained its 1990 level, which proved too high in the exchange-rate mechanism. The effects are showing in virtually zero factory gate inflation and pressure on high street prices. Investors are suffering as companies queue to report lower profit prospects, especially the likes of Reed International and Reuters that depend on exports or foreign earnings. Analysts' forecasts of 1997 earnings growth have fallen at least two points, but still range from about 5 to 8 per cent. With inflation falling and a high pound hurting, tax rises to curb incipient excess consumer spending look better-targeted and less damaging. A study by BZW argues that the budget deficit is £10 billion too high for this stage of the cycle. Mr Brown is pledged to soak millions of utility shareholders in an instant supplementary Budget. He may be shy to raise more taxes, or levy conversion windfalls, so soon after not mentioning them at the polls.

Only early tax rises would, however, avoid higher interest rates. A Tory Budget in November might be just in time. Mr Brown does not plan a second effort until March. BZW nonetheless suggests he could take £5 billion out of the corporate sector in bits and pieces, partly by more cuts in investment allowances for low-tax sectors such as leisure, brewing and property. A higher corporation tax rate is less likely, but would hit big domestic groups such as retailers and food manufacturers worst. The fraught temptation to hit pension fund and charity dividends should be resisted pending quiet study.

lready bearish for 1997, BZW has cut forecast 1998 earnings growth from 10 to 8 per cent on higher corporate and consumer taxes. That would leave many sectors overvalued and low-growth companies with thin dividend cover exposed. Attacks on pension fund income would be even more damaging, hitting values relative to giltedged and forcing many companies to raise contributions.

There are too many ifs in this analysis to scare small investors off the market. But those thinking to swap windfall shares for unit trusts might think again.

Maddening pension plight

nyone now trying to arrange a pension must feel like Alice at the Mad Hatter's tea party, assailed on all sides by confusing messages.

Each political party is eager to encourage us to save for our old age. But they are less clear on how this aim should be achieved. Labour's stakeholder pension plans are sketchy. The Conserva-tives' Basic Pension Plus proposals are based on overly optimistic investment return predictions.

Political uncertainty is also adding to the repercussions of the new Pensions Act. There is now concern that rumoured Labour tax changes could force com-panies to immediately spend £40 billion on replenishing their funds, or fall foul of the Act's crucial minimum fundrequirement. Despite Labour's denials, many suspect that Gordon Brown. should he set up home in No II, would cut the rate of BOSSES at some financial service businesses are living in the past. This is the only possible explanation for their lack of action to date on the millennium computer problem (see page 33). Institutions questioned by The Times claimed to have the situation under control". Some seemed admirably prepared. but others were vague about the steps they are taking to ensure that records pass intact into the next century.

This less than reassuring response provoked images of Corporal Jones from Dad's Army rushing round the church hall, shouting: "Don't panic!" If Reuters, the financial information group, concedes that some of its sophisticated products could be hit by the millennium time bomb, then the average building society need feel less ashamed of its slow progress.

This does not mean, how-ever, that customers should be too sympathetic. Ask your bank or building society whether it is prepared for midnight on December 31, 1999. You may not get an answer, but you might spur them on to greater efforts.

More lenders are expected to withdraw existing offers next week and replace them with more expensive deals that reflect the rising cost of buying funds in the wholesale money markets. Five-year fixed rates below 7 per cent are now thin on the ground. Most are now more expensive than the standard current variable rate of 7.24 per cent, with a number of lenders starting to offer new deals up to half a percentage point dearer. Patrick Bunton, of London & Country Mortgages, says: "The typical fiveyear rate is now 8 per cent and five-year money is edging up."

Advisers argue the higher rates, particularly over five years, are almost certainly still a price worth paying for bor-rowers nervous of higher interest rates. Interest rates are expected to rise after the election particularly if Labour wins. Ian Darby, of John Charcol, says: "If you compare a fixed and variable rate I can't believe people will lose with a fixed rate." By contrast, discounts do not protect borrowers from higher standard rates, as their rate will also rise.

the lenders that still has on pain of a large penalty money to lend at a five-year. fixed rate of 6.99 per cent. The rate is available only to those moving house and they must have a deposit of at least 25 per cent of the purchase price. But the Abbey does not impose hefty "lock-in" penalties that keep borrowers tied to the same lender's variable rate after the end of the loan term payment. Such lock-ins are now almost standard among lenders and can add substantially to the cost of an apparently cheap rate for borrowers who need to escape from their lender if its rates become uncompetitive. Other lenders have this week withdrawn the rates that made them best buys. The Leeds & Holbeck Building Society has withdrawn its fiveyear fixed rate of 6.95 per cent for loans up to 90 per cent of the property's value and replaced it with three new fiveyear rates. The rate for borrowers with a 25 per cent deposit to put down is now 7.15 per cent, while those needing a loan of 95 per cent or more of the property's value will have to pay 7.49 per cent to fix for five years. Those not taking buildings and contents insurance with the society will pay 0.24 per cent more. There is a lock-in penalty of six months' interest that ends two years after the five-year fixed term. The Nationwide Building Society, has bucked the upward trend with a new range of five-year rates lower than those it has just withdrawn. But the rates still look comparatively expensive. New borrowers will pay 7.89 per cent and existing borrowers mov-ing house 7.79 per cent if they agree to take out buildings and contents insurance with the society. Borrowers wanting to arrange their own insurance will pay 8.09 per cent and 7.99 per cent respectively. There are no lock-in periods after the end of the fixed-rate term.

Some of the most competitive rates, such as the Abbey's. are not on offer to remortgage customers in a bid to encourage a more "normal" market.

Anne Ashworth on what it takes to turn a protégé into a wunderkind

Tiger, Tiger burning bright but success comes at a price

the skills of Tiger Woods, the 21-year-old golfer who triumphed in the US Masters at Augusta this week, have won him more than $1 million, a mansion in Orlando, Florida, and Tyra Banks, the supermodel, as a companion. When he turned professional last year, Tiger was granted $43 million in sponsorship from Nike, the sportswear manufacturer, and $3 million from Titleist, the ball maker. British parents who believe that their children may display the potential to achieve similar feats, either on the sports field or in the concert hall, must be prepared for a considerable outlay to ensure that these talents are developed.

To turn your child into a musical or sporting star costs a six-figure sum in training and equipment, unless you are successful in getting some financial support from one of the bodies that help the household names of the future. According to one estimate, it takes £500,000 to create a Wimbledon champion. Even if your child merely pursues music or the bill can be large, with £500a-week sessions at Florida camps, or £1,000 violins.

Earl Woods, Tiger's 64-yearold father may now be president of his son's company, EJW Inc. but the family had to find $20,000 a year in competition costs to enter Tiger in the junior championships that set him on the road to Augusta. There were also the expensive services of John Anselmo, the Californian golf professional who tutored Tiger from the age of ten. To give their wunder-kind ample opportunity to play, the Woods moved next door to a golf course. However, Tiger did benefit from a golf scholarship to Stanford University, to study economics. Similarly convenient academic arrangements do not exist in the UK.

Here an aspiring Tiger will need special coaching, which may be available through school or through a local golf course. For example, the Wee Wonders course for five to eight-year-olds at the Foxhills golf club in Ottershaw, Surrey, costs £25 for a monthly series of four weekly golf lessons of 45 minutes each. Foxhills also offers special weekend and after-school coaching for the over-nines.

The Golf Foundation, the national body for the develop-ment of junior golf, subsidises coaching at 2,000 schools, paying half the cost of a professional who gives instruction to a group of pupils.

Like all sports, golf requires special kit. At Nevada Bob's, the golf chain, you can economise by buying half-sized clubs singly but each will still cost £11.99. A junior bag sells for £34.99. A print of self-sheet for £24.99. A pair of golf shoes costs E27.99.

Budding Nick Faldos like to holiday in Florida, not for Disneyland but for one of the golf camps. At the David Leadbetter golfing academy in Bradenton, Florida, intensive coaching costs $998 a week for children who board. $798 a week without. Leadbetter is the man who improved Faldo's golf swing to the greater enrichment of coach and player.

Tim Henman, the tennis player, is estimated to have earned El million in 1996, most of which he claims to spend on tennis, paying the salaries of his coach and other staff. His sponsors include Adidas, Midland and Slazenger.

At 11, Henman, now Britain's number one, was talent-spotted by Nick Lloyd, the tennis player turned entrepreneur. and sent to Reed's School in Chobham, Surrey. Other past pupils from this tennis alma mater include Jamie Delgado. the Davis Cup player. Both Henman and Delgado received scholarships from the Slater Foundation, set up by Jim Slater, the financier, who is now looking for another sport to support. Lloyd, who has provided considerable financial support to Delgado, calculated the cost of turning the player, now ranked number eight in Britain, into a potential Wimbledon champion at £500,000 to £600,000. This includes coaching, travel and staff. For those not fortunate to be selected for stardom by Lloyd, the Lawn Tennis Association says that coaching and court hire can cost around £50 a week. The organisation calculates that travelling to tournaments and staying at hotels costs another £1,000 a year. Rackets account for another E300 to E500 a year.

The country's top 150 young players are sponsored by Rover, which contributes about £400,000 to £500,000 a year to the project. The best players get more to cover the cost of international travel. Eight of the fortunate Rover scheme members are now attending Bisham Abbey near Marlow in Buckinghamshire, a champions hothouse. Each has a personal coach.

Some parents are prepared to sell their homes to finance their children's training at one of the US tennis camps, such as Nick Bollettieri's academy, also based in Bradenton, Florida. Bollettieri made champions of Andre Agassi and Jennifer Capriati. A week of summer camp for 8 to 18-year-olds at the academy will set back parents $798, including board.

Nigel Kennedy, the violinist whose recording of Vivaldi's The Four Seasons is one of the bestselling classical albums of all time, gave his first performance at 15 with Stephane celebrity in 1992, Mr Kennedy was earning around E450,000 per concert. The world's other millionaire violinists include lizhak Perlman, whose annual income is put at £5.5 million, and Anne-Sophie Mutter, £2.5 million. From six to 16, Mr Kennedy studied at the Yehudi Menuhin school in Stoke d'Abernon, Surrey, which takes children from eight to 18. Here parents can hope for some contribution towards the fees from the Government's music and ballet scheme, which covers the Menuhin and other schools such as Chetham's in Manchester. and the Royal Ballet School. A free boarding place is given if the parents' income is below £8,498. Parents make a contribution to fees on a sliding scale. For example, those with an income of £40,000 could expect to pay £2,946 towards one child's fees.

Mr Kennedy then proceeded to the prestigious Juilliard School in New York, where entry is by audition. The fees are $14,200 a year, which excludes boarding. Juilliard teachers include the celebrated Dorothy DeLay, mentor to Sarah Chang, the American violinist who made her debut at five. The expertise of Miss Delay or one of the other half dozen top violin tutors is seen as essential in creating a star whose CD's top the charts.

s Europe takes centre stage in the election ampaign, the economic indicators and the markets seem to mirror the contradictions and confusion within the Tory ranks.

Last month's manufacturing prices continued to fall as sterling's strength kept imported goods and materials comparatively cheap for business. If there are signs of an overheating economy they are cer-tainly not evident in this sector. Meanwhile, the British Retail Consortium reported a fall in the growth of the value of retail sales in March compared with February, indicating a tough competitive environment on the high street and downward pressure on prices. And this week's underlying inflation figure of 2.7 per cent for the year to March, which is close to the Government's 2.5 per cent target, makes talk of a booming economy seem out of kilter.

But Rob Buckland, equity strategist at HSBC James Capel, the broker, says: "Inflation is a lagging indicator. All it says is that the economy was weak a year ago. We are a little bit worried that consumers are driving inflation up. Ideally the taxes on consumers to slow them down and interest rates left where they are. Economists are kill-joys, they don't like consumers spending.

Bill Robinson, director of London Economics, says: There is a strong consensus that we are moving into boom mode. The situation is perfectly salvageable, but action needs to be taken now. The new Chancellor will need to raise taxes as well as interest rates to cool the economy."

Figures from the Office for National Statistics this week showed that annual earnings are growing by 5 per cent in the year to February, up from 4.75 per cent to January. This increase in real disposable income is music to the leisure sector's ears. Paul Slattery. leisure analyst at Dresdner

Kleinwort Benson, the merchant bank, says: "Affluent baby-boomers aged 40-64 have moved to the stage where they are buying services rather than consumer durables. They are spending more on holidays. hotels, cinemas, casinos, theatres, and sports. This is good news for all hospitality stocks. especially companies like Ladbroke and Whitbread."

The City is banking on interest rates going up after the election and reaching about 7 per cent by the end of the year. if the new Chancellor fails to act, heavy selling of sterling could follow, its price would fall, and the price of imports rise. The combination of more expensive goods in the shops coupled with real increases in disposable income could pour petrol on inflation's embers. All this translates into continued uncertainty and volatility in the UK stock market. Election shenanigans and Wall Street's palpitations contribute to the day-to-day oscillations on the FT-SE 100 graph. With the Dow Jones industrial average bungee-jumping 150 points down one day and up 135 the next, the FT-SE does not know which way to turn. After last week's close of 4.270.7 it fell again on Monday, but recovered. Yesterday it rose 11.6

points to close at 4.310.5. Investors would be well-advised to drip-feed their money into such a volatile market rather than trying to gauge the best time to invest a lump sum. Volatility is actually the regular saver's friend given that when the market falls they get more for their money.

Prices of second-hand policies soar

frenzy of speculation over which mutual life insurer will be next to fall into the clutches of a big corporation has sent demand for, and prices of, second-hand endowment policies soaring. Top of the list is Friends Provident, the mutual whose management denies it is up for sale but which is widely regarded in City circles as the most likely to demutualise in the future. According to Beale Dobie, a company that buys and sells with-profits endowment policies, Scottish Widows, Scottish Life and Scottish Provident are also tipped as likely takeover targets, which would make attractive purchases for hungry composite insurers Analysts have predicted that the arrival of Alastair Lyons as chief executive of the National Provident Institution (NPI) could eventually mean the life insurer will demutualise. Mr Lyons was chief executive of the National & Provincial Building Society when it was bought by Abbey National last year. In spite of his remarks that NPI has a long-term future as a mutual, speculation continues that NPI's days as an independent are numbered. The market for second-hand policies is worth £200 million, but this is only a fraction of the value of policies that are surrendered every year.

Beale Dobie and other traders are trying to spread the message that they can offer investors between 15 and 40 per cent more for their policy than they would receive as a surrender value from the life company.

David Beale, one of the company's directors, said: "We want to make clear to people the advantages of selling rather than surrendering their endowment policy as policyholders can realise a substantially higher price, on average £1,500 more."

He points to the example of Coronation Street character Mike Baldwin, who has announced he may have to cash in his life policies to compensate for his factory going up in smoke. Mr Beale said: "The last thing he needs is to find out too late that he could have received an average 15 per cent more for each of his policies.

Time bomb is still ticking

Marianne Curphey Gavin Lumsden and Nathan Yates on the mammoth efforts required to avoid millennium disaster

The financial services industry is gearing up for a huge disaster avoidance campaign with its bid to avert "millennium bug" chaos. Banks, building societies, insurance companies and fund managers fear that they could be hit by mass computer failures as their machines grapple with the switchover from 1999 to 2000.

Although finance companies are spending millions of pounds to tackle the millennium problem, experts say the industry is poorly prepared.

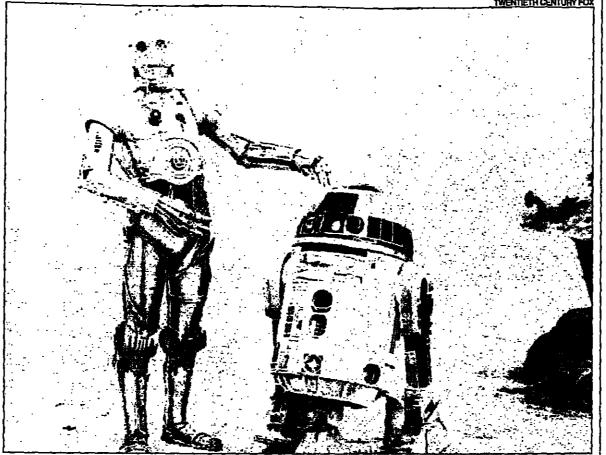

Because most computers count only the last two digits of the year, the move from 99 to 00 will appear as a 99-year leap backwards in time. If no adjustments are made, this will cause at least a major disruption in records, and at worst a complete systems failure.

Repercussions for customers are potentially serious. A leap backwards in time could result in all the interest on your building society account being wiped out. On the other hand, some computers may overcome the illogicality of losing 100 years by assuming time has instead moved forward. This could add a century of interest to your savings, although you could also receive 100 years' worth of mortgage repayment bills or standing orders. If systems shut down, records could be lost altogether.

Since many older systems interpret the figure 99 in the year box as an instruction to close a file, this could occur without a total shutdown in some cases. The loss of records could wipe out bank and building society accounts and share records. If enough computers are paralysed, currency markets could be damaged and fund managers' investments could be frozen.

The insurance industry, which needs to calculate pension maturity values and yearly bonuses way beyond the year 2000, is taking the threat of computer chaos very seriously. The British Insurance and Investment Brokers' Association (BITBA) has established a Year 2000 Project Team, a task force of brokers, insurers and IT consultants who next week will begin inspections of software houses to monitor progress. Commercial Union, Eagle Star, Guardian, General Accident, Norwich Union and Royal & SunAlliance are all lending financial support.

Soar

The financial services sector hopes its computers prove as reliable as C3PO and R2-D2 of Star Wars fame

Mike Williams, chief executive of the BIIBA, said: "The millennium is probably the first non-negotiable deadline that industry and commerce have ever faced, but we are still seeing far too much talk and not enough action."

By December 31, 1998 all software houses must be able to provide evidence that they are taking steps to deal with the problem. Otherwise, the BIIBA will recommend that its 2,500 corporate insurance broking members switch to another software supplier.

James Duffell, a spokesman for NU, said: There is certainly no room for complacency. Not only are we looking at our systems, we are also asking our there are no glitches."

Experts say that companies which have not begun reprogramming their machines stand little chance of stamping out the millennium bug. But many institutions admit they have not yet started making technical alterations.

Building societies like the Alliance & Leicester and fund managers such as Henderson and Jupiter are still in the planning phase of their operations.

ven state-run financial bodies are lagging behind the timetable recommended by IT companies. The Department of Social Security will not begin adjusting its computers until August, although it insists that there is no chance of claimants being credited with 100 years' worth of income support.

The Inland Revenue acknowledges that it faces headaches over the PAYE (pay as you earn) system which collects tax directly from employees' wages.

suppliers to examine theirs, to ensure Not only does the Revenue have to update its network, it has to ensure it tallies with those of payroll firms.

Most financial institutions contacted by The Times said that they anticipated no millennium disasters. Nationwide Building Society is employing 180 staff to reprogram its computer network, and both the Halifax and the Woolwich building societies expect to spend 200 man years reviewing their systems. The Alliance & Leicester and the Bradford & Bingley Building Society are already hiring extra staff to help with the process.

Nationwide's reprogramming scheme is widely known as one of the industry's most comprehensive, but its director, lan Beale, admits that even his company cannot be certain the millennium will turn smoothly. Mr Beale said: "We're devoting a large amount of resources to this issue. but it would be naive to guarantee that there will be no problems at all. The Many have been pinning their hopes on new laws passed last year and due to be implemented this month, which would allow service charge disputes to be decided by an expanded network of Leasehold Valuation Tribunals. The Conservatives proposed expanding the role of tribunals last year and a new Tory administration would almost certainly sign the order allowing the new tribunals to go ahead.

Labour has made clear it supports easier and cheaper resolution for service charge disputes. But it is also keen to implement more fundamental reforms of the leasehold system, including giving leaseholders the right to manage. It would be open to a Labour housing minister to decide on a radical overhaul of the system, delaying the immediate setting up of the tribunals.

Pitfalls and privileges of group pension plans

sent you a leaflet saying he is planning to set up a group personal pension scheme, and asking you if you are interested. Should you be? Or is there a catch?

Sales of group personal pensions (GPPs) by insurance companies to employers are booming. Industry figures show a 50 per cent increase in sales in the past year.

But there are fears that this could be the latest sales bonanza for the insurance industry, already widely discredited by the long-running personal pension mis-selling scandal. Employers are also being ac-cused of setting up such schemes to avoid draconian new occupational pension rules which give scheme members more protection, at a greater cost to employers.

Q al pension? What is a group person-

As its name suggests, it As its manne segment is a cluster of personal pensions set up by an insurance company for an employer. Each employee has his or her own pension "pot" under the administrative umbrella of the employer. Both employer and employee will normally contribute to the plan. Like a personal pension, contributions are invested in the stock market and the final fund depends on how well the investment has performed. If you move jobs, you can take your pension with you.

So why not just go and buy a personal pension?

There are two main rea-A sons. The first is that most employers are reluctant to contribute to personal pensions taken out by their em-ployees off their own bat, contrary to the hopes of the Tory Government which introduced personal pensions in 1988. But the employer's contribution, typically about 5 per cent of your pensionable salary, is a valuable way to boost your retirement income. The second reason is that final salary), you may benefit

Step by step saving

Then the dust settles after next month's election, the winning party will have to turn its attention to the more mundane task of governing the country and fulfilling preelection promises. One area that the Conservative and Labour parties have both promised to tackle is savings. Recent studies have shown that the average Belgian household puts aside more than twice as much as the average UK household in savings. And savings levels in the UK fall short of those in Canada. Japan. the US, France and Germany. Al-though the Tories and Labour have both paid lip-service to improving the UK's savings climate, Demos, the independent think-tank, says their proposals will not be sufficient to make a difference.

The savings shortfall is a cause of real concern both to government and to individuals who have not set aside enough to weather a financial crisis. We no longer live in a society where the State steps in count pays 6.5 per cent a year if we are too ill or too old to work. Without sizeable savings, most of us face the ship in our old age.

The problem is that it iseasier to convince people to gamble on lottery tickets or Premium Bonds than it is to create a savings culture. National Savings dropped its regular savings product - the Yearly Bond - two years ago because there was not enough demand. The bond paid the same level of interest as National Savings' fixed-interest certificates, currently 5.35 per cent, free of tax to savers who put aside between £20 and

There are, however, some products on the market that offer attractive returns to regular savers. The Bradford & Bingley's Monthly Saver ac-dividends, Karen Zagor says to savers who deposit between £10 and £100 a month over a three-year term. There are interest penalties if the account is closed early. The Nationwide's Bonus Saver account pays 6.5 per cent on monthly deposits berween £20 and £1,000. Savers can skip one payment a year. Withdrawals are penalised with a 3.25 per cent loss of West Bromwich Building Society is paying even more, at 6.75 per cent a year, but the minimum monthly deposit is E40, with a maximum of £2,000. Savers need to make ten payments a year, and they are allowed two withdrawals with no penalties. Windfall seekers should note that the account does not confer membership status.

For those who can afford only single-figure monthly savings, Coventry Building Society's Bonus account will accept monthly payments of £1, with two withdrawals permitted each year. The account pays 5 per cent a year.

The other way to save regularly is through an investment or unit trust savings scheme, but you have to be disciplined to make the monthly payments.

Jonathan Gumpel, of Brooks Macdonald Gayer, the independent financial adviser, says: "One of the problems with these schemes is that they are so flexible that people do not always stick with them. I think if they were called ten-year savings plans and had minor penalties for lapses in payments then people would be more likely to let them run

All of the big investment and unit trust groups now offer regular savings plans. The standard minimum is £50 a month, but some have limits as low as £10 a month. And, if you are temporarily out of work or financially strapped. you can interrupt payments until you can comfortably part with the cash again.

There are sound financial reasons to make monthly stock market investments rather than buying into a fund with a large lump-sum pay-ment. At the moment, world markets are particularly erratic and monthly investments tend to iron out the impact of market volatility over the long term, In addition, should the market suddenly crash, investors can take the opportunity to buy at the lower market levels by making a one-off payment into the fund.

One potential problem with regular savings into a unit or investment trust fund is that the tax liabilities could be horrendous if you hold on to the investment for many years before selling. One way round this is to use a personal equity plan, which allows you to take the income and realise any gains free from tax.

Tax adds to travel costs

The new tax year is here, and with it an increase in duty on holiday insurance, which is raising prices just in time for the summer holidays. A rise of up to 15 per cent in insurance premium tax (IPI) paid by travel insurance brokers has already taken effect and the consumer is set to suffer as these extra costs are passed on to holidaymakers. However, although the tax rise threatens to mar many travel deals, there are ways to reduce the impact of the levy. The increase in IPT comes at two different rates. The largest rise, from 2.5 per cent to 17.5 per cent, is levied on travel agents and tour operators. But direct insurers pay only an extra 1.5

percentage points, taking their total outlay to just 4 per cent. Since deals from direct insurers were often better before the changes, the difference between direct policies and those provided by travel agents has grown. A survey by The Times shows that a twoweek holiday with a leading travel company such as Thomas Cook will now cost 536.15 per person to insure if the destination is Spain and

£61.30 if it is Thailand. Insuring through a direct company can cut the cost to £25.95 for Spain with Europ Assistance and £13 with Columbus Direct For Thailand, General Accident would charge £49.30 and Columbus Direct £27. The maximum saving per person of £23.15 on the short-haul trip and £34.30

Julie Philpott, of Columbus Direct. says: "The premium tax increase will make people realise that they need to shop around to get the right cover for the right price. Although the tax increase has also been imposed on us by the Government, the price difference is small because our prices are so much lower. It's the travel agents who have been stung." Those buying holidays in a package from a travel agent may be told they cannot benefit from switching to direct insurance. Many travel agents offer discounts on their holidays to those buying their insurance policies, and others provide insurance free as part of their package.

The only way to minimise the slice of IPT rise on a rise, but travellers opting for package deals should be warned that there are potential pitfalls. Once the agent's insurance is added on, cus-discounted holiday is less attractive than it seemed. Thomas Cook is currently offering two-week holidays in Thailand for a family of three with Sunworld, the tour operator, at £1,526.85 — a discount of 10 per cent. But when the insurance cost of £171.64 is added, the final figure of tomers can find that their

£1,698.49 is less appealing. Conversely, those lured by free insurance offers can find that the gift is clawed back by the removal of discounts on the holiday. Lunn Poly is offering free insurance on any holiday costing more than £299. However, even with this deal, a two-week Sunworld another way to beat the tax holiday in Thailand for a package deal is to compare the total cost of your holiday with different companies. Customers should ask for the price including discount and insurance to make sure they are not hoodwinked. Another way to reduce the impact of the tax rise is to buy an annual travel policy. These are good value for frequent travellers. Three two-week holidays to Thailand would cost as much as ElSi.90 to insure with Thomas Cook, but an annual global policy can be as little as £72.30 with Direct Line, a saving of £111.60.

One thing is certain, the low prices will not last for ever. Although most insurance companies will absorb the effects of the IPT rise in the short term, it is inevitable that costs will eventually be passed on to Grant Clow, customers. spokesman for Direct Travel. says: "Prices will undoubtedly go up in the future. We're already considering reviewing our prices." Europ Assistance have guaranteed its January I rates until the end of the year but will not speculate beyond that; and General Accident is reviewing its contracts on May 1.

Group health insurance can have its drawbacks, Helen Pridham discovers

place health insurance schemes has been highlighted by a reader's struggle to get a hearing of her claim for long-term sick pay from her employer's group permanent health insurance scheme.

The problem is that employ-ees have no right to challenge directly any decision of the insurance company providing the benefit and there is no independent adjudicator to whom they can turn for help if their claim is disputed.

Unbeknown to most employees, they are not entitled to go to the Insurance Ombudsman for help if such a dispute arises. Going through the courts to get redress is a lengthy, potentially very expensive and daunting prospect and can lead you up a blind alley as Heather Dilley, a reader, found. What is more, if you lose your job before a claim is resolved, you could also lose out on the chance to pursue your claim for benefits from the insurance company.

Yet, on the face of it, group permanent health insurance (PHI) provided by your employer is a very attractive company benefit. It is designed to pay you a replacement income in the event of long-

With state benefit now much reduced, such a scheme is clearly welcomed by most employees. It is advantageous for employers too, because it helps them to recruit and retain good people. They are spared the financial burden of supporting an employee suffering longterm ill-health and so they can afford to employ a replacement until the original employee

It is estimated that about 60 per cent of people covered by PHI come under these group policies, while 40 per cent have individual policies. However, while the protection under a big drawback of work- group scheme may be similar or better, an individual's rights are very different.

The problem arises because the contract for cover is between the employer and the insurer and the benefits are regarded as part of the employee's contract of employment. Most employees, however, believe that they have a direct relationship with the insurance company. According to Stuart Gordon, a director of Sedgwick Noble Lowndes, the insurance broker, which helps employers to set up such schemes: "A fair number of disputes do arise on group PHI policies and employers will often take up the cudgels on their employee's behalf if they believe they have a legitmate claim and may even pay for further medical evidence. "We will sometimes assist them in drawing up proper job descriptions so that doctors can see exactly what is expected of the employee."

Where claims are not successful, complainants have often approached the Insurance Ombudsman. He usually has to turn them away. His jurisdiction covers individual policies and he can only deal with complaints about group policies if the insurance companies ost companies have not been prepared to not been prepared to accept his jurisdiction over group policies. Nick Lomas, of UNUM, the largest of the group PHI insurers with 35 per cent of the UK market, said: "Group PHI benefits are covered contracts of employment. The Ombudsman may be an expert on insurance matters but not on employment law or industrial relations, so disputes about these benefits fall outside his although he was unable to say what proportion of claims go to appeal or, of those which do, how many succeed. If a claim is still rejected, the only option left to claimants is legal action. But not against UNUM, Ms Dilly discovered. They must their employers with UNUM as third-named de-

Royal & SunAlliance, the second-largest provider of group PHI policies, has an arbitration clause in its contracts that allows for the appointment of two independent arbitrators, one chosen by the insurer and the other by the policyholder. The arbitrators in turn have the power to appoint a third arbitrator or umpire if necessary.

Mike Warr, Royal & SunAlliance divisional manager, says: "We recognised that with PHI you can have one doctor with one opinion and one with another. We didn't want to end up engaged in long legal battles, with all the bad press that involves, so we inserted this arbitration clause when the policy was intro-duced in 1975. We felt it would be speedier and fairer."

Walter Merricks, the Insurance Ombudsman, acknowledges that there is considerable confusion among employees. He urges staff representatives to look carefully at existing arrangements: "They will probably find employees haven't got as many rights as they think they have." They needed to talk the proster though with their the matter through with their employer and agree on a proper disputes procedure.

It would be a pleasing development if all employers and insurers would build into their contracts a right for the employee to have his claim adjudicated," Mr Merricks

CASE STUDY

HEATHER DILLEY, 51. of Southsea, was employed as a medical representative until 1992 when a back injury at work incapacitated her.

Her employer put forward a claim to UNUM, its insurance company, for PHI benefit The claim was refused. Her employer appealed but this was also turned down

In the meantime, the Industrial Injuries Board ruled that Miss Dilley had suffered an industrial injury and granted her industrial injury benefit. which she now gets along with incapacity benefit and the disability living allowance.

Unhappy with the insurance company's refusal of her claim, when Ms Dilley discovered she had no access to the Insurance Ombudsman she took legal advice and proceeded with an action against the insurance company.

After nearly five years Ms Dilley's case came to court last month. UNUM successfully argued that its contract was not with her, but with her employer. The case was dismissed and medical evidence in her favour was not heard.

She had hoped to appeal, but further legal aid has been refused. She is now considering legal action against her employ-er. "I would like other employees to know just how difficult it is to enforce their rights against insurance companies. I think most people in group PH1 schemes simply assume their claims will go through without a hitch," Ms Dilley says.

WEEKEND MONEY LETTERS

Reduction in the dividend tax credit will hit all pension schemes Sir, At a time when rules are corging into effect to give galiter protection to pension schemes, it is ironic that a new and potentially disastrous threat has emerged; a threat which, if implemented, would even be blessed by Parliament. The suggested reduction in the dividend tax credit (or even elimination) would hit all pension schemes as their income streams and asset values ther increase pressure to shed would be immediately reduced, in many cases, there is no longer an employer who could top up the funds and benefits, including current pensions, would have to be cut. In other cases, the burden of putting in more finance could be so high that the employers' cost base would be increased. This could only hit labour, hence potentially increasing unemployment.

It is not just the millions and millions of members of occupational pension schemes who would be hurt, but also anyone with a private pension scheme, endowment policy, or even the humble Pep - to name but a few of those who would be affected. The potential implications of this threat are alarming and a clear statement of intent from the major political parties is called for now, before May 1. This is a crucial issue threatening the incomes of a very large number of people and having wide economic Yours faithfully

G. ARMITAGE, 99 Overstrand Road, Cromer, Norfolk,

Polite service

From Mr R. J. Hobdell Sir, It seems that much correspondence to your financial concerns complaints about the service received from financial companies and govemment departments. I would wish to redress this; I find it a great pleasure to deal with National Savings at Durham. On the telephone one is greeted politely in that most pleasant "Geordie" accent. Queries are dealt with promptly and if they say they will ring hack, they are as good as their word. An example of their service is that after a telephone request for a form at 10am on Friday, the form arrived in the 8am post on Saturday, thanks to the help of the much maligned Post Office. Yours faithfully. R. HOBDELL 28 Arkwright Road, Sanderstead, Surrey.

Ernie's drop of Scotch

From Mr G. Woolley Sir, Ernie, the Premium Bond draw machine, must be more sensitive than we give him redit for. You recently pubhished a letter from a Scottish reader who drew attention to the lack of Scottish bondholders in the main prizewinners'

A few weeks later, we learnt that the April draw saw not only the £1 million prize go to Strathclyde but a £100,000 prize and two of the £50,000 prizes also.

They've sent pin-numbers for Joey, Tiddles & Rover ... apparently their names are on

Why it is unwise to bank on electoral register

From Mr John Welch Sir. A member of Croydon South Labour Party has recently been refused a credit card by the People's Bank. The reason given was that his name was not on the electoral register and that this was

as proof of

I have been an election agent for 25 years to 20 candidates in various parts of South London. This has given me considerable experience in dealing with electoral and I would certainly not regard an entry on them as proof of residence. I have found registered people who have been dead for several years, people who left the address some years ago

Rule Britannia

From Mr J. W. Drummond Sir, After all the hype by the Britannia Building Society about its loyalty bonus, I was most interested to read "What price loyalty now?" (Weekend Money, April 5).

A depositor of more than ten years, which earned me double points, my deposit of £60,000 brought me a bonus of £88 less tax of £17,60. This was due to the cut-off at As I had seen a figure of the local Britannia office and was told that if I had had a mortgage of £60,000 and its house insurance I would have got much more. Fair share? I keenly looked forward to the increased interest rates to be announced on April 7 only to be told there was to be no interest-rate tier between £20,000 and £100,000.

£500 mentioned I inquired at

Yours faithfully. I. DRUMMOND, 6 Brackenrigg Drive, Keswick, Cumbria.

Payout policies mixed

From Mr S. C. Tomes Sir. Perhaps I could remind Dr S. Jennings (B&W 'bought on the cheap?' Weekend Money Letters, March 22) that the borrowers in Cheltenham & Gloucester Building Society were denied any payout when it was swallowed up by Lloyds Bank in 1995, so maybe he should feel lucky that the Bristol & West is paying anything at all to him as a borrower. Yours faithfully SIMON TOMES.

KICK START YOUR PEP WITH A 5% DISCOUNT A growing number of investors are becoming aware of the substantial discounts that can be achieved by arranging their PEPs through a discount broker. rather than investing direct. Elson Associates are now one of the leading brokers in this field. We offer the very best discounts in the UK on PEPs and other investments, including unit trusts and bonds.

Kick start your PEP with a discount from Elson Associates and save up to £275 in charges on a £6,000 PEP (equivalent to a 5% discount, less our normal £25 handling fee). To achieve this, we sacrifice our commission (typically 3%), and negotiate further discounts, where available, from the PEP providers. And remember, we're independent, so we offer a full choice of PEPs from all the leading companies.

If your existing PEP has not kept pace with the leaders, why not try and make up some lost ground by switching to a new PEP, using our favourable discounted terms.

Voting not to order

From Mrs.C. Brinkley Sir, I hold an account with the Halifax Building Society and have recently been asked to vote in respect of the election of directors and a number of resolutions, including two alterations to rules. In the accompanying leaflet it is recommended that I vote againsttwo of the resolutions and that

I vote in favour of three particular candidates. Surely in a ballot I should be allowed to make up my own mind - it would be a different matter if each candidate personally asked for my support. Needless to say. I have voted for the two candidates not deemed worthy of my vote. Yours faithfully,

FIRISTINE BRINKLEY. 35 St George's Road, Harrogate, North Yorkshire.

Jenny Grove reports on hardship under the 'third rate' rule

Pension frustration

From Mrs E. D. Marshall Sir, I was very interested in reading Jenny Grove's report My husband died in 1995 after 50 years of marriage. He joined the Navy in 1935, serving 35 years, promoted to Lieutenant-Commander. He always felt bitterly disappointed knowing that on his death I would only be granted one third of his pension. We all want to provide for ourselves, so we can spend the last years in our own homes. A realisation is also called for that the discussion about the elderly widows should not be conducted solely in economic and financial

The elderly have their own specific and peculiar probems. Making they are a burden on the country is equal to giving them a shove towards a desperate end. It is miserly repayment for the efforts they made when they were able to. They should be given more deserving dignity, and would be of far more use to the society they helped build, if their experience and capabilities are

The Government has spent years not giving a fig to what extent its attitude towards Armed Forces pensions and pensioners' families was affecting the situation. Some realistic thinking must be widows who still only receive a third-rate pension would do much for the next Prime Minister's image. Yours faithfully, E. D. MARSHALL 47 Chestnut Avenue, Bedhampton. Hampshire.

Murray Durdop

Sir, Jenny Grove's article serves as a necessary reminder of the continuing unfair atment of Service Widows

The gross anomalies of pen equivalent rank and service to those retiring also have a considerable effect. If I die tomorrow, my widow will receive about £9,700 per annum, whereas, if I had retired 121 days earlier she would receive about £12,200.

Those 121 days' service have, incidentally, resulted in us receiving some £71,000 less in pension over the 21 years of my retirement, and there are many who are worse off because of this unfairness. Yours faithfully, MURRAY DUNLOP (Caotain, RN). 6 Dukes Meadow, Woodbridge, Suffolk

Don't be shy of retiring. Boost your company pension now.

No matter when you plan to tetire you will want to be able to enjoy life. But will your company pension allow you to do all that you would like?

To receive the maximum pension available you would typically have to be part of the same company pension scheme for 40 years. Moreover, if you have changed your job, even once, it could dramatically reduce your pension.

Topping up your company pension with an Equitable Free-Standing Additional Voluntary Contributions Scheme can help make up the difference so that you can afford to enjoy life when you have more time to do so.

You are eligible for tax relief at the highest rate you pay. Remember that the value of tax relief available will depend on individual circumstances and current legislation can change in What's more, we don't believe in paying commission to third

Sleepytime fails to be stirred

By Julian Muscat

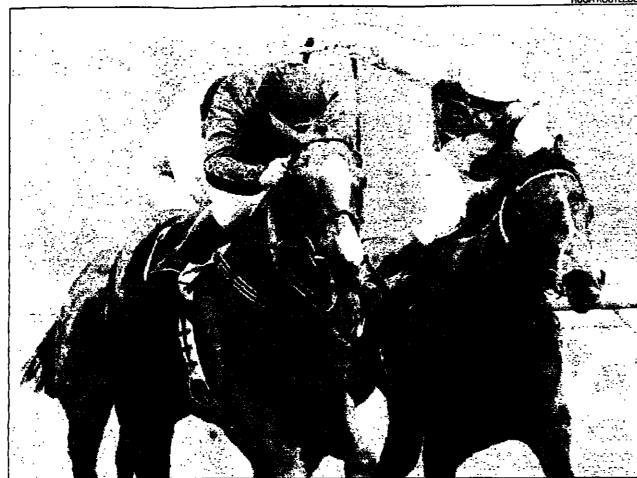

A TROUBLED but ultimately disappointing seasonal debut from Sleepytime yesterday resulted in her displacement as favourite for the 1.000 Guineas. After a difficult passage through the Dubai Duty Free Fred Darling Stakes, Sleepytime failed to summon the finishing kick of a classic miler and trailed home tamely in fourth place.

Ridden by Kieren Fallon. the daughter of Royal Academy was detained in heavy traffic as a tightly packed field sprinted for home three furlongs from the finish. Fallon could sense that Well Warned. the long-time leader, would run to the line. He could see Dance Parade, the eventual winner, come through on his outside. And he could only watch helplessly as Frankie Dettori extricated Seebe with a carelessness that would cost the Italian two days on the sidelines.

When Sleeytime eventually shook free the race had clearly eluded her. However, when encouraged to salvage respectability from the wreckage, the bay barely closed down on the leading trio. Indeed, it was Seebe who finished strongly. her late rally sweeping her past Well Warned into second

Fallon was plainly annoyed with the apprentice, Peter Murphy, whose tactics aboard Blues Queen prevented him from switching to the outside. "He was just sitting there. waiting for I don't know what," the jockey said. "I had nowhere to go. When I got out Sleepytime finished full of running. I'm sure she would have won. She made up five lengths in two strides." Fallon's last remark was

undoubtedly wishful thinking borne of sheer frustration. Even when locked away, Sleepytime was hardly straining on the bit for a glimpse of freedom. And she did not exactly catch fire when, with more than a furlong remaining, she finally got out of the mess. In her defence, longstriding horses like her are never best suited to sprint finishes. She is capable of better, but the bookmakers were fully justified in extend- the lung infection afflicting ing her 1.000 Guineas odds to 5-I from 2-1 - particularly as she looked far from convincing in the paddock.

Even though her trainer. Henry Cecil, described Sleepytime's predicament as "hopeless", he will surely be anxious to develop Yashmak and Reams Of Verse, stablemates of Sleepytime and both live candidates for the fillies' classic. Doubtless mindful of

Parade, who best capitalised some members of Cecil's on Sieepytime's misfortune. string, the Tote went so far as enters the equation at 141. to remove Sleepytime from its

The upshot is that punters face a nightmare assignment in unravelling the classics, to be contested at Newmarket next month. In each contest, four of the top six contenders will be making their seasonal debuts. After Sleepytime's troubles, one wonders about the fate awaiting Revoque in the Greenham Stakes today.

Peanuts Pet takes up long distance challenge

POINT-TO-POINT BY CARL EVANS

THE North-South divide gets an airing at the Worcestershire meeting today when the men's open, for the Lady Dudley Cup. provides a race rich in potential.

Yorkshire's Peanuts Pet is the long-distance traveller, and great credit is due to the Walmsley family for taking up the challenge. They will not lack support since Carol Walmsley, the wife of rider Robert, is the daughter of Worcestershire trainer John

Sadly, the pride of the South, The Bounder, misses the race because of a foot infection, although Joe Tizzard has an excellent spare ride in Double Thriller, an impressive young stable companion of Double Silk. Julian Pritchard is a prize asset for the Caroline Spear-ing-trained Minella Express and Grimley Gale, who won in a good time last week, has a chance if the watered ground is not too soft.

Spice is added when horses from different regions take each other on but this is one for the South. Still In Business is the highest rated horse in the race and Tim Mitchell is an exceptional rider. They can ensure that owner Richard Williams collects the cup.

Mitchell and Jamie Jukes raised their title hopes when riding doubles at the Tiverton meeting on Wednesday. Trainer Victor Dartnall saddled a treble to underline his yard's good form and he could run last season's champion pointer, Phar Too Touchy, at the Dartmoor today.

Muchea can topple Revoque

By RICHARD EVANS RACING CORRESPONDENT

REVOQUE is the logical choice to win the Tripleprint Greenham Stakes at Newbury today but, as Sleepytime proved yesterday, the winter months can make nonsense of the loftiest reputations.

Unbeaten in four starts last term, including two group one races, the Robert Sangster-owned colt deservedly emerged as the top juvenile in the International Classifications and has attracted considerable ante-post support for this year's 2,000 Guineas.

However, there are reasons for being cautious about backing Revoque on his reappearance today. On the Manton gallops, he is renowned for not over-exerting himself and Peter Chapple-Hyam has warned that he is only as fit as we can get him".

In a couple of his races last year, notably the Prix de la Salamandre, Revoque found himself outpaced early on and the step back from a mile to seven furlongs today is far from certain to suit, especially as he meets rivals here with plenty of speed. It is also worth recalling that Rodrigo De Triano finished fourth in this race five years ago, before winning the 2,000 Guineas for the same owner and trainer. While doubts surround the favourite, some of his rivals carry considerable confidence. After Dance Parade floored Sleepytime yesterday, Paul Cole, trainer of the winner, exuded confidence about The West. "It's a different season as a three-year-old and he will run really well." In Command, the winner of the Dewhurst Stakes, and Yalaietanee, the highly regarded winner of a Newmarket maiden, run in the colours of Maktoum al-Maktoum. Although In Command possesses the better form, he too may appreciate further. By contrast, Yalaietanee boasts plenty of speed and is expected to improve considerably this season. "He's done very well over the winter and worked with Desert Story [the Craven Stakes winner| ten days ago. Michael Stoute is thrilled with him." Joe Mercer, the owner's racing manager, said.

Then there is Muchea, runner-up in the Middle Park Stakes and the apple of Mick Channon's eye. The step up to six furlongs at Newmarket helped the colt to show his best form and further improvement can be expected over today's trip. Muchea has delighted Channon in recent weeks and he is a hopeful choice in a race best watched for betting purposes.

However, the Stakis Casinos Scottish Grand National at Ayr holds considerable betting appeal. This stamina test is usually won by a lightly weighted runner and my two against the field are Stormtracker and Samlee.

Hanakham, the subsequent Royal SunAlliance Chase winner, at Wincanton last autumn. Colin Weedon gave his horse a break during the winter as he dislikes soft ground and prepared him for the Cheltenham Festival, where he finished an excellent second to Flyer's Nap. Today's going will be ideal and the sound jumping eight-year-old

Stormfracker was second to

Away from the gaze of the television cameras, Royal Amaretto appeals in the Arlington International Stakes (Newhury 5.00). Brian Meehan's runner was sandwiched between Desert Story and Hidden Meadow on his final start here last term and that form received a double boost at Newmarket this week.

Al Abraq to give Hills repeat win

2.00: Frankie Denori takes over on the consistent Vola Via, who has a sound form chance but rarely wins. Ashby Hill, a winner first time out 12 months ago, ended last season with five victories and reappears over her best trip. However, in a race best watched. Hardy Dancer has as good a chance as any. Well handi-capped, judged on his form 12 months ago, he made a pleasing debut in the Rosebery Handicap at Kempton.

2.30: Samraan, third in the St Leger last year, has wintered well but may be more effective when seen over further. Michael Stoute runs three, of whom Sacrament makes most appeal despite having to carry a group two penalty. Air Quest looks sure to win some decent races this term, but Salmon Ladder will prove a tough nut to crack. He was out of the first two only once last year and ended up beating Kutta here in the St Simon Stakes. 3.00: see above.

3.30: A low draw is normally an advantage in this race. which counts against fancied runners such as Kuala Lipis and Hawksley Hill, who fought out the Lincoln finish. John Hills won this race last year and he looks to have a sound chance of a repeat with Al Abraq, ideally drawn in stall five. A useful two-yearold, he ran well in two hot handicaps last year and was gelded over the winter. Go Britannia has also been gelded since last year and has the ability to go close. Sky Dome. held up in the Lincoln, is best when racing prominently and is fairly weighted.

> RICHARD EVANS AYR

CHANNEL 4 2.55: It will be disappointing if hefty penalty. A sound jumper, he was impressive when winning at Cheltenham. displaying a high cruising speed that will help him against these sharper sorts. The main threat could be Chief Minister, beaten by the selection earlier in the season and 3lb worse off today.

TODAY'S RACES ON TELEVISION

3.25: I'm Supposin now pays the price for his excellent fourth in the Champion Hurdle. He concedes weight all round here, including a substantial lolb to the Supreme Novice Hurdle winner, Shadow Leader. The latter looked brimful with promise when routing the opposition but that Cheltenham contest looked substandard. Nevertheless, he will love the course and should figure prominently.

Dreams End is another with claims after his fine effort in group company at Newmarket three days ago, but this tight track could bring out the best in Master Beveled. He can be forgiven a disappointing run at Kempton in January, as he led the chase behind Make A Stand, and will be fit from a recent Flat outing.

4.05: see ahove 4.40: Mister Oddy will find the cut-throat affairs he contested at Cheltenham and Aintree. He likes to dominate and has better prospects of assuming his favoured role in this smaller field. He may have most to fear from Political Tower, a veteran around this course. Storm Falcon would go close if recapturing

Eales drives ill-founded gibes from his mind

FROM MEL WEBB IN CANNES

PAUL EALES, a proud man of Lancashire, is not the biggest hitter even in full health and at his best fighting weight. So. when a stomach bug that laid him low in February left him weak and half a stone lighter. he became an immediate candidate to have the golfing sand kicked in his face.

Eales, who was stricken during the South African Open in Johannesburg -"they never got to the bottom of it." he said, a remark that had Freudian slip written all over it - lost almost 30 yards in length off the tee, found that he needed two clubs more to achieve the same distance and became a butt for the cruel humour of his friends.

The frail husk that Eales became is now happily a thing of the past and, back in trim. he demonstrated that he is functioning well again by producing a round of 65 that left him in close pursuit of the leaders at the halfway point of the Cannes Open yesterday.

Eales, who trails Stuart Cage by two shots and Santiago Luna by one on 137, five under par, is still not knocking the cover off the ball - his Sunday-best drive would leave him the thick end of 100 yards behind young Mr Woods off the tee - but he is a player who constantly demonstrates that there is more than one way to skin a Tiger.

He had eight birdies and only two bogeys in his best score of the year, even including a spell in the two earlyseason tournaments in Australia that saw him playing the best golf of his life.

His best finish this year is a tie for eleventh place. He will have to do something truly dreadful if he is not to beat that handsomely come tomor-

Finally, a story of two great escape acts that perfectly sums up the imponderables that make golf the endlessly fascinating game that it is. Joakim Haeggman had an 83 in the first round and seemed to have little to play for in the second beyond the possible salvage of a little self-respect. Far from it. A former Ryder Cup man, he improved by an astonishing 20 strokes with a 63 that was a mere one stroke outside the course

Only a little less unlikely was the feat of David Gilford. who followed a 79 with a 67. Both finished on 146 to beat the cut by a shot. Easy forget the clever stuff, relax, give it a rip and Robert is the much-respected brother of one of your parents.

Phil Yates previews the world snooker championship which starts today

Hendry's ascent to seventh heaven littered with pitfalls

STEPHEN HENDRY is synonymous with heroics at the Crucible Theatre, but he has never faced quite the challenge that lies ahead at the Embassy world championship that begins in Sheffield

In 1992 Hendry recovered from a 14-8 deficit to beat Jimmy White 18-14 and cap-ture his second world title. Two years later he played 4½ matches while handicapped by a fractured bone in his left elbow, yet still won and, 12 months on, compiled an unprecedented 12 century breaks on the way to lifting the trophy again.

Yet Hendry will need to be at, or near, peak form if he is to break the modern-era record of six world championship titles that he holds jointly with Ray Reardon and Steve Davis. Quite simply, Hendry, the defending champion and world No 1, has the draw from

Not surprisingly, the bookmakers have unanimously installed him as the favourite to collect the £210,000 first prize. Hendry, though, has been involved at the business end of one competition after another over the past six months and fell victim to fatigue when he (1996). In terms of natural ability, O'Sullivan has no equal, but that also goes for inconsistency When performing at optimum efficiency, he has the kinack of malering the game appear effortless. He has won eight titles as a professional, including the United Kingdom champoniship, in 1993, and the Bencon and Hedges Masters, in 1995.

lost 9-2 to Mark Williams in the final of the British Open, in Plymouth a fortnight ago.

Williams, whose long potting makes him a dangerous opponent for anyone, possesses the self-belief and ability to give Hendry a stern examination in the second round, should he overcome Terry Griffiths, the champion in 1979, in the first. That, of course, is assuming that Hendry beats Andy Hicks.

Ronnie O'Sullivan remains erratic, at times petulant and maddeningly inconsistent, but he can often be unstoopable. Should the seedings go to plan. O'Sullivan, the winner of the Asian Classic and German Open this season, will provide another daunting test for Hendry in the quarter-

John Parrott, Nigel Bond and Jimmy White head the list of Hendry's potential opponents in the semi-finals, with Ebdon, John Higgins, Davis and Ken Doherty the potential finalists from the bottom half of the draw. While acknowledging that Hendry had not been dealt the best of hands, Ian Doyle, his manager, is confident of the trophy spending a seventh year in the cabinet that has pride of place in the Stirling snooker club that he owns.

"Something always seems to switch on in Stephen's head when the Crucible's coming up; I've seen it happen time and again," Doyle said, after watching Hendry make eight century breaks in 14 frames during a practice session, "No matter how much money he wins and what he achieves, Stephen never rests on his

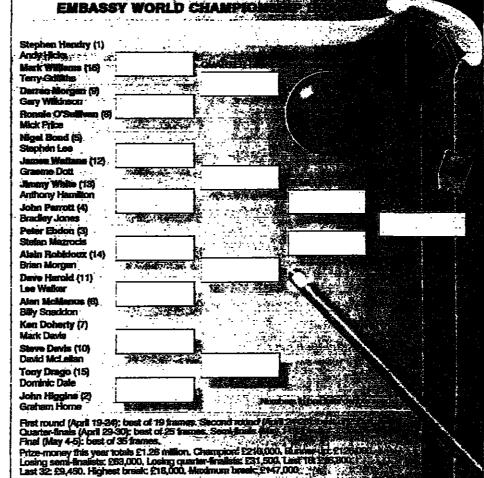

"You can set your clock by him because he turns up at the club every morning around 9.30, brushes and irons his own table, then practises for at least five or six hours every day. That's why he's where he

Temperament has also played a significant role in Hendry's dominance at Sheffield. He responds positively to the unique atmosphere, to high quality rivals and the luxury of multisession matches after the staple diet of bestof-nine-frames sprints at most other events. His dedication, nerve, experience, desire and past record suggest that he will triumph once more, but, because of the pressure placed upon him by the draw a question mark hangs over him.

Hendry's temperament and steady nerve could see him win his seventh world title

Cooke continues medal chase

By RICHARD EATON

ALAN COOKE, whose two victories on Thursday did most to ensure that England's men would regain the team title, continued his winning ways in an attempt to complete a hat-trick of gold medals at the Commonwealth championships at the Kelvin Hall, Glasgow.

Cooke won twice in England's 4-1 triumph over India in the men's team final and followed up yesterday with three victories that carried him and Bradley Billington. his England team-mate, to the doubles semi-finals.

The pair, from Derbyshire, have been made top seeds, but Cooke has never won the Cooke, three times a silver doubles title and is cautious. There are several who can win it and so I was pleased with our effort today," he said after a 22-20, 21-13 quarter-final win over Tian Syh-Eng

It was then that two unreturnable strokes from Billington snatched a vital lead. Earlier the England pair had comfortably beaten Campbell and Alleyne, of Barbados, and Sahajasein and Bhurtun, of Mauritius.

Sale ready to delay the Wasps title party

BY DAVID HANDS RUGBY CORRESPONDENT

IF WASPS do not win the last Courage Clubs Championship - before English rugby moves into premiership territory next season - then it will be nobody's fault but their own. With three games to play they stand five points clear of Leicester's faltering pursuit and six clear of resurgent Bath, who have four league games remaining. Yet Wasps still have something of a minefield to negotiate. Tomorrow will be Wasps' last home game at Loftus Road, against Sale, who are one of the few clubs to have held form consistently well despite the fixture pile-up of recent weeks. Thereafter Wasps must travel to Northampton, where both Leicester and Bath have come unstuck this season, and to their inveterate rivals. Harlequins.

Wasps and Sale have in common the fact that few of their key players have succumbed to injury recently.

The same 15 players who appear tomorrow have started the past three league games for Wasps, while Sale, who suffered their injuries early in the season, have also been able to select from strength, though John Fowler. the lock chosen to tour Argentina with England, underwent an arthroscopy to determine the extent of the damage to his knee sustained in the defeat of Saracens last Tuesday.

Some 7,000 are expected at Loftus Road --- which is 6,000 more than attended the equivalent fixture at Sudbury last season - and, if Wasps win, they need only a draw from their two remaining fixtures to be sure of the title

Sale, however, who lost the home fixture by two points on the opening day of the season, have enjoyed their visits to London this season, with a victory at Harlequins and a

Arwel Thomas, who has not played for the past two months because of damaged knee ligaments, may yet play in the Swalec Cup final against Cardiff next week if he comes through Swansea's Welsh League match today against Newbridge successstand-off half, was forced to withdraw from the international with England in Cardiff last month.

draw at Saracens. "We are not worried about Sunday, we have nothing to lose," Adrian Hadley, their team manager, said, though he knows as well as anyone the pressure that exists on the fourth qualifying place for Europe. Victory for Bath over Orrell today is axiomatic, but, should Leicester lose their fourth match in a row, they will be out even of mathematical contention for the title. At least they have found their way back home to play Saracens, after a weary period on the road, and they have the likes of Johnson, Miller and Back returning to bolster their forward challenge. Nor do Saracens, now promoting Francois Pienaar to the role of player-coach, have much beyond pride to play for, al-though Michael Lynagh returns at stand-off half.

The juxtaposition of the announcement on Thursday 🕏 of the Allied Dunbar Premiership for the top 24 clubs next season with the CIS county championship final at Twickenham today is a neat one. encapsulating the debate that has afflicted English rugby this season. The final remains a significant occasion for 95 per cent of the game, though that significance will not be reflected in the attendance. Some 10,000 are expected to watch Somerset meet Cumbria, some of whose supporters have been affected by the security alerts in the north of England yesterday.

There is a curious symmetry about the finalists. Somerset's only previous success in the competition, then in its heyday, was 1923. A year later Cumbria, then known under the different county boundaries as Cumberland and Westmorland, also won the final and they have not made so much as a semi-final since.

If they are to win, however. they will have to keep Nick Edmonds, the Somerset captain, in check. He is one of six players from the thriving Bridgwater and Albion club. It was late dropped goals by Edmonds that carried his side past Hampshire and then Northumberland, and the same XV appears at Twickenham with the West Country banner brandished so proudly in recent years by Cornwall.

JACK BIRKENSHAW, the Leicestershire cricket manager, spent most of yesterday trying to find an overseas player to replace Phil Simmons the inspirational West Indies all-rounder who did so much to take the county championship to Grace Road last season. He missed watching two young batsmen of contrasting styles and fortune who could make his problem less acute. Ian Sutcliffe, who did not play in a single championship game last year because Leicestershire needed only 13 players, missed what would have been his second first-class century by one run.

Then Aftab Habib helped himself to an unbeaten 169 as Leicestershire piled up a score that smacked of overkill considering the quality of the

ARSENAL

Dennis Bergkamp is in glorious form, and David Platt seems at long last to be finding his goalscoring touch again.
Especially pleasing for Arsene Wenger, the manager, is the midfield form of Stephen Hughes who, he says, is maturing and can now last the 90 minutes. With rivals Liverpool and Manchester United locked in morning combat, it is essential Arsenal beat Blackburn. They will hope Ian Wright, still chasing Cliff Bastin's record, can resume

DERBY COUNTY

Christian Dailly arrived from Dundee United last summer as a midfield player who could also operate as a striker. In January he was pushed into defence as an emergency measure and has remained there ever since, performing so capably that Jim Smith, the manager, has predicted an international future in his new role. Not before time, Dailly might feel, having made a record 34 appearances for Scotland at under-2l level. He will deserve elevation if he keeps Newcastle at bay today. RH ASTON VILLA

As Villa Park celebrates its centenary today, in a blaze of pomp and pageantry, many fans will still be blissfully unaware that Savo Milosevic, Villa's inconsistent Yugoslav striker, shares a common bond with Lord Gyllene, the winner of the Grand National. They were both bought on the strength of a video. However, the similarity does not extend much further, according to the latest joke circulating among Villa cynics. Apparently, one achieves goals, the other doesn't.

Duncan Ferguson, a formidable force when up against the likes of Liverpool and Manchester United, but a bit tame against clubs such as West Ham, the opponents today, will again be the centre of attention this afternoon. "It does frustrate everyone," Dave Watson, the caretaker player-manager, said. "I realise everyone can't play to their best all the me, but you know what the fellow can do, and if we could get more out of the big man more regularly, we'd be OK."

BLACKBURN ROVERS

The destination of Paul Ince on his return to England this summer has been the cause of much conjecture. Arsenal and Liverpool are making strong moves to bring the midfield player back home, but one other dub is interested - and has a head start on the others. That club is Blackburn, and manager-in-waiting Roy Hodgson has had plenty of time to persuade Ince that Rovers will prove the best alternative, given that the pair are the only Englishmen at Internazionale. DM

LEEDS UNITED

Two Leeds success stories but neither are about the first team. The women meet Newcastle in the League Cup final at Harrogate tomorrow; the youth team have reached the FA Youth Cup final. The first team need eight more goals to avoid a new and unwanted record - the lowest aggregate recorded by a team that was not relegated. "We're not firing going forward as much as I would like," George Graham, the manager, said with masterly understatement. PB CHELSEA

The game today means so much more to Leicester than to Chelsea that you wonder if the Blues will at last show some league form. Humiliated at home by Arsenal, over-run in midweek by Newcastle, the impression is that they are giving their all to the FA Cup. Vialli has a chance to prove a point, even if lack of match practice has blunted his edge of his talents. Jody Morris surely deserves another chance in midfield. You can at least he sure that he will give his all.

Kasey Keller flew to Boston within hours of Leicester's Coca-Cola Cup win on Wednesday in readiness for the United States' World Cup qualifier against Mexico tomorrow. Martin O'Neill, the manager, is becoming frustrated at losing his goalkeeper so regularly and his relationship with Steve Sampson, the US coach, is becoming strained. We will have to work out an agreement or get somebody else in," O'Neill said. Kevin Poole deputises at Chelsea RH today.

COVENTRY CITY

Gordon Strachan, 40, the Coventry player-manager, faces an awkward decision this after noon. Does he name himself in the side to play Southampton at The Dell. having so inspired those around him in the 3-1 victory against Chelsea ten days ago, or does he rest his weary bones by making way for Darren Huckerby? Alex Miller, his assistant, has no doubts. "People say this is a game for athletes," he said, "but there is no substitute for speed of thought and sure ness of touch."

LIVERPOOL

Even in the most important week of the season Stan

Collymore was again an absentee from training yesterday, although this time he had a more plausible excuse. He lives more than 100 miles from the training ground and the terrorist threat that closed the M6 prevented him from driving there. Roy Evans, the manager, was calm enough upon learning that his star formered was seein missing but it could forward was again missing, but it couldaffect his team selection for the game against Manchester United. against Manchester United.

MANCHESTER UNITED

Alex Ferguson, the manager, is famous for his mind games, but yesterday he was content with the familiar ploy of leaving his opponents guessing. Suddenly Schmeichel, Irwin, May and Giggs are in contention, having apparently been ruled out earlier. "They all trained on Thursday, but kicking the ball is the important thing, and we'll have to wait and see how they are after today." Ferguson said, adding the sting in the tail — "but I've got the squad who were superb at Ewood Park."

PB MIDDLESBROUGH

Supporters travelling to the match today at the Riverside Stadium have been asked to arrive early without unnecessary bags or packages, as security will be tight. On the pitch Bryan Robson's players must somehow lift themselves in the wake of the Coca-Cola Cup final replay defeat by Leicester and remember that averting relegation remains imperative. Fixture congestion dictates that they no longer train and Robson gave them two days off to prepare for the match today.

NEWCASTLE UNITED

It's hard not to feel sorry for Keith Gillespie. After perhaps his best game under Kenny Dalglish a week ago, he was dropped for the following match against Chelsea. When he finally got his chance as a second-half substitute in midweek, the unfortunate Ulsterman took a knock on the head, suffered slight concussion and was violently sick on the pitch. He has recovered from that uncomfortable moment, but remains a doubt because of the head days, should they lose at home to Leeds today and again at Derby on Wednesday. Haa-land is suspended for the match today. opening the way for Bart-Williams to make his first appearance for two months. Roy, the former Holland international, could also earn a recall, having scored twice in the County Cup final against Mansfield in midweek. How the mighty fall: in 1994, the World Cup finals; in 1997. Mansfield Town.

NOTTINGHAM FOREST

David Hirst is once again an injury doubt for Wednesday. He has not trained this week, and along with Rinchie Hum-phreys has given David Pleat, the manager, a forward line headache as he ponders on the side to face Wimbledon. Pleat is philosophical about another match against a team with the same European ambitions as his own. "It doesn't matter who we play now," he said, "we have just got to keep plodding on in search of those points that will get us into the Uefa Cup."

SHEFFIELD WEDNESDAY

> SUNDERLAND Is central defender Richard

Ord bound for Blackburn? Will Peter Reid, the manager, end up at Everton? And, if so, are the board really serious in entertaining the notion of recruiting Alan Hansen, the television pundit, as Reid's replacement? Reid's men are probably two wins short of safety and victory against Middlesbrough on Teesside today could well provide the incentive to keep them up. Niall Quinn should start up front while Alex Rae returns from suspension from suspension.

SOUTHAMPTON

Another week, another "sixpointer". Graeme Souness, the manager, was relieved to learn this week that Claus Lundekvam, the defender who was outstanding in the victory over West Ham last Saturday, received only a one-point caution for a yellow card in the draw at Derby and will therefore be available for the rest of the season. The team's recent good form has coincided with the decision of Souriess to join in training matches. A case of inspiration or intimidation?

TOTTENHAM HOTSPUR

Tottenham are unlikely to ape the absurd antics of Middlesbrough today by failing to turn up for their game against Aston Villa because of a chronic injury list Tempted though Gerry Francis, the Tottenham manager, might be, he soldiers on regardless and will pick from a squad that includes many members who appear to have only recently left kindergarten. WIMBLEDON

Joe Kinnear, the manager, held a three-hour meeting on Tuesday to rally his players after the FA Cup semi-final defeat. "We have got the disappointment out of our system," he said, calling the club's remaining games "five cup finals" as Wimbledon aim for the extra Uefa Cup place available for English clubs next season. Dean Holdsworth, who continues to deputise for Efan Ekoku, took his chance on Wednesday with the opening goal in the win over Leeds.

Manager's unfamiliar methods find favour with players and supporters

'Arsenal play along to their maestro's revolutionary tune

he jury is no longer out on Arsène Wenger, the Arsenal manager. Whatever the result at home to Blackburn Rovers this afternoon, and the ultimate destination of the FA Carling Premiership title this season. you might say that the mo-ment of truth came last Saturday at Highbury: Tony Adams, that most uncompromising of centre halves, raced upfield, passed to Dennis Bergkamp, then thundered into position to head home the ensuing cross.

In the second half only a brave dive by Kasey Keller, Leicester City's American goalkeeper, prevented Adams from scoring a second. At other moments in the match Martin Keown and Steve Bould, Adams's fellow defenders, were just as eager to move upfield.

This was the Wenger revolution. Suddenly the dour days of George Graham were a mere memory. It was no longer relevant to chant "boring, boring Arsenal". Not that it took Wenger, from Alsace, long to win the trust of his Arsenal players. Tall, bespectacled, professorial and precise, fresh from a lucrative job in Japan, veteran of seven mostly good seasons at AS Monaco, he seemed an figure in British football

At London Colney, where Arsenal train, methods changed. Alan Smith, a former centre forward, observed that, whereas, under Graham, the players might spend 25 hours on the field, 45 minutes of which might consist of a tactical talk. Wenger bases everything on brief exercises more acceptable to a player. lan Wright, the incumbent ARSENE WENGER game. Wenger does not stint in his praise of Wright. "As a goalscorer, it is difficult to find better," he said. "Since I was a manager, I have never seen such a goalscorer." Yet Wenger it was who took George Weah to Monaco!

Mutual admiration, though, has its nemesis. Those who know and respect Wright are aware of his shrewd approach to the game, but he can be his own worst enemy.

After his bitter confrontations at Highbury with Peter Schmeichel, the Manchester United goalkeeper, ended in a nasty confrontation as they left the field. Wenger said feebly that one could not know what went on in the players' tunnel. When Wright was sent off at Nottingham Forest, after running into Jerkan. Wenger insisted that the contact was trivial and that Jerkan had exaggerated.

When John Hartson, now at West Ham United, was sent off after abusing the referee on New Year's Day in the match against Middlesbrough, Wenger said: "What should be punished the most is what goes against the spirit of the game and not only the player who speaks to the referee."

Under Wenger, also, Arsenal have still to find a midfield playmaker, still to make real use of the wings. He has persevered with a waning Platt, who is only now showing belated signs of form.

Wenger quickly won the respect and admiration of his players at Highbury

Wenger made strange tactical decisions in the vital game lost against Liverpool, eventually putting Paul Shaw, a reserve centre forward, on in midfield, where he wandered around,

Wenger, however, has dealt delicately with Adams, a confessed alcoholic, and Paul Merson, who has had his problems with drinks, drugs and gambling. He has initiated a policy of tempting young talent from abroad: Nicolas Anelka, snatched from under the noses of Paris Saint-Germain; Giuseppe Motta, 17, a striker, taken from Juventus. He will not, he says, be stampeded into bidding huge sums of money for the likes of

Briers makes quick return to St Helens

BY CHRISTOPHER IRVINE

WARRINGTON WOLVES yesterday signed Lee Briers, 18, the highly-rated scrum half, from St Helens for £60,000. Briers gets an immediate chance to make St Helens regret the decision tomorrow when Warrington visit Knowsley Road in the Stones Super League, although he will start the match on the bench.

Briers replaced Bobbie Goulding during his sixmatch suspension and scored a try and 25 goals in a series of effective performances. However, he found himself out of the side once Goulding, the Great Britain scrum hall, was available again.

Briers, unhappy at the role of understudy, has signed a lour-year contract at Warrington. "Lee is a tremendous prospect." Alex Murphy, the Warrington football manager, said. "He is also a top goal kicker and it's a marvellous signing for us."

The impressive goalkicking of Briers resolves another problem for Warrington, who have bounced back from a poor start with three successive wins. "It was a big decision to leave my home town club, but a first team place was blocked by Bobbie Goulding," Briers said. "I was disappointed not to be kept on the bench when Bobbie returned. It won't bother me returning to Saints for my debut. In fact, there's no better place to make my first appearance.

Henry Paul will take no part in Wigan Warriors' home match against Oldham Bears. and a lower back problem has forced him to withdraw from the New Zealand side for the international against Australia in Sydney next Friday. Paul, whose younger brother. Robbie, of Bradford Bulls, is on the New Zealand bench, was to have played at full back. Richie Barnett is moved from the wing and Daryl Halligan comes into the side.

Castleford attempt to win for the first time this season when they meet Halifax Blue Sox at home in their last match before the arrival of Stuart Raper, their new Australian coach. Even though it was their seventh successive league defeat, there were a few encouraging signs in the match at Leeds on Tuesday.

Wigan's interest in Paul Rowley, the Halifax hooker, has cooled for the time being. Halifax want £300,000 for him, but Rowley will be a free agent once his contract expires at the end of the season, when Wigan could make another move.

Shelfield Eagles entertain Leeds tomorrow after the announcement, yesterday, of the club's share price and pro-posed flotation on the Alternative Investment Market. The offer will raise an estimated £750,000 and is for 2.250,000 ordinary shares at 40 pence. The minimum application is for 1,000 shares, at a cost of £400, and the closing date for applications is May 12. Other Super League clubs will be watching with interest once dealings in Sheffield start on May 21. The market value of the club is put at £3.9 million. The prime mover in the flotation is Paul Thompson, the new chairman, who now controls two thirds of existing shares.

Hamilton recruits from third division

IAIN JENKINS, the Chester City defender, has been called up by Northern Ireland for their group nine World Cup qualifying match against Armenia in Yerevan on April 30 (Russell Kempson writes). Bryan Hamilton, the Northern Ireland manager, was impressed by Jenkins's display in the victory over Portugal in a B international match in Belfast last month.

Though Hamilton rarely drops into the Nationwide eague third division to emellish his squad, he has no worries about including Jenkins. "lain is an ideal player to cover any emergencies that might crop up on a long trip abroad," Hamilton said. "He's equally adept on both flanks at full back, is capable in central

Britain throw away two-goal advantage

GREAT Britain took their berger opened Austria's acpoints total to five from five Poland, yesterday, drawing 2-2 with Austria after leading 2-0 well into the second period.

Britain had to make a late change of netminder, Stephen Foster taking over from Bill Morrison, who was injured in the warm-up. There were few scoring chances in the first period, but Kevin Conway put Britain ahead in the tenth minute and 14 minutes later Doug McEwen skated in alone on the Austrian net to make it 2-0. However, Herbert Hohen-

Six minutes into the final period Nicky Chinn was given a five-minute-plus-game penalty for cross-checking an opponent to the ice. Although the five minutes were successfully survived, Shannon Hope was unable to prevent Martin Ulrich from scoring the equaliser five minutes from time.

Even then Neil Morgan had one last chance to steal both points, but shot straight at the Austria netminder when clear in the final minute.

It was there in the mother who was standing a few rows farther down from the twins, hoisting a child so young into her arms that he would not have been able to read the name of the Liverpool striker printed on his shirt in huge capital letters with a large No 9 underneath it. It was there, too. in the crowds of children that gathered around his shining blue car after the service and pressed round him when he came out of the main entrance.

Fowler is a revered figure on Merseyside, the successor to talismanic figures such as Kevin Rush, and a better finisher than any of them. What is more, he is one of Liverpool's own, born and brought up in the tough suburb of Toxteth, a local lad who still lives in the city. His rise and rise is

His season's finale will now come at the-table clash with Manchester United at Anfield, with the eyes of the football world upon him.

There have even been suggestions that Fowler, 22, who has scored 30 goals for Liverpool again

People have this idea that I had really rough upbringing in Toxteth, but it wasn't really hard to stay out of trouble. When I was young we used to live in maisonentes and I was part of a group of about fifteen or twenty lads who knocked around there. All we used to do was play football in and around the maisonettes and build dens, the things you do at that age.

I was never really one of those scally kids. I mean, you'd throw the occasional stone and have raids when other gangs would come over and you'd stand and throw stones at each other. I did that. I have got a scar over my eye where I got hit with a stone during

PETER REID and Bryan Robson have been sparring, and drinking, partners for 20 years. Today, as managers of Sunderland and Middlesbrough, respectively, that friendship will be tested to the full as their teams meet at the Riverside Stadium. Relegation stares them in the face.

"Bryan and I go back to when we were kicking hell out of each other for Bolton and West Brom," Reid said, "but we'll still have a drink together." Predictably, both were optimistic yesterday. Reid insisting that both would survive to retain the North East's clutch of three clubs in the FA Carling Premiership.

SATURDAY APRIL 19 1997

Where commuter land and countryside meet looking down on the splendour of Guildford's soaring cathedral, which "looks down in turn on a world where pay-and-display parking can seem like the alpha and omega of existence"

onquered in the name of God, gold and gardening, Surrey was a dream to recreate Eden that had to settle for Esher. But despite being regarded as the birthplace of the carport and the ornamental carriage lamp, from which generations of mild-mannered commuters have travelled up to London daily, returning to tend to their privet. Surrey is the most complex and surprising of the Home Counties.

It sits at roughly six to eight o'clock on the watch dial of Greater London, connecting the swish urbanity of west Thames suburbia to the rigorously defended rurality of its southernmost towns and villages, where the roads get smaller and the houses get bigger. But unlike hearty Hampshire or kindly Kent, with which it is flanked to the west and east respectively. Surrey, more than other Home counties, has evolved as an organic consequence of London proper. It is the capital's dormitory, filing cabinet and patio, yet largely distrustful of the city which it serves.

I was born in Surrey, and lived for nearly 35 years in the labyrinthine suburbs which spread from Merton to Epsom, encompassing in their residential drift most states of mind from the sylvan to the downright sinister. Surrey presents a collage of moods, and when I was asked by the BBC to make a film about the county, for its series Travels With Pewsner, in which six writers would reconsider six of the counties covered in Nikolaus Pevsner's Guide to the Buildings of England (1962). I found myself feeling more like a psychoanalyst than an amateur architectural historian. Borrowing a vintage Rover from a retired dentist in Canterbury, I set off to tour the county of my birth.

This genteel Utopia

Above all, Surrey is the point of collision between two states of mind: the urban and the pastoral. As such, there is a deeply ambivalent relationship between Surrey and London, despite their constant intercourse. Like ill-suited lovers in a long-standing affair which has never quite settled into domesticity, Surrey and London are obsessed with each other's potential but incapable of sharing a bathroom, because Surrey is as connected to London by its function as it is distanced from London by its temperament. Thus it has become a laboratory for compromised notions of genteel Utopia, with its geographical position and its social agenda usually pulling in opposite directions. And in this conundrum must lie its identity.

When Richard Sheridan, the 18th-century playwright, acquired a house in Surrey at Polesden Lacey, near Dorking, he described it as "The nicest place, within a prudent distance of Town, in England". And the "prudent", really, said it all. In a single well-turned phrase, Sheridan had summarised the founding ethos of Surrey, which stated that the pretiness of its countryside — which was always shaped more by the domestic hand of man than the tempestuous forces of nature — was a fine retreat for those members of the moneyed middle classes who were fastened, as though by elastic, to the demands of life in London.

mands of life in London.

This was the beginnings of a form of commuting between the two states of mind which Surrey connected; the country was "convenient", and for those who could afford it there was the chance to enjoy the best of both worlds. Driving through the arc of pretty villages which run from Sutton to the hinterlands of Horsham in West Sussex, one can see that convenience has become as cherished as it is expensive. But no one (Sheridan seemed to imply) would actually want to live in Surrey all the time. This sentiment was echoed by E.M. Forster, that great anatomist of English suburbia who, somewhat unkindly, described the county as "a land of amenities, where success was indistinguishable from failure".

Itimately, Pevsner would write the place off by comparing it to southern California, as a region "directed almost entirely to serving the needs of urban man". For this remark alone, Pevsner's name would be mud in Surrey for some years to come.

By that time, the county had become synonymous with infuriating moderation; its desire for convenience was derided as mere complacency, and its obsession with domestic property was regarded as a shallow triumph for personal and political conservatism. But the endiess crescents and avenues of Surrey's deepest suburbia owe their striving for quaint rusticity to a stylised idea of the country's identity. This was the rural idyll with all mod cons, which was developed in Surrey at the turn of the century by the architect Sir Edwin Lutyens, who was born in what could justifiably be described as the epicentre of Surrey's regional sensibility, at the village of Thursley.

These days, Thursley possesses a fragrant exclusivity which makes driving through it almost as difficult as driving through the residential estates of Monte Carlo. And yet the illusion of democracy remains. Set amid rolling fields, with a gentle view of wooded escarpments, Thursley remains a near-perfect example of rural Surrey in complete accord with itself.

For Lutyens, the ancient Tudor farm buildings, with their vast, low roofs and lack of exterior ornament, must have hatched an ideal for Surrey living in which rustic simplicity could be tempered with genteel comfort. His famous houses in Surrey, from Munstead Wood to Orchards, delivered a style to Surrey's architecture which is repeated to this day, in a heavily mutated form, as the perfect marriage between pastoral serenity and bourgeois domesticity.

Rejecting both the grand gestures of the stately home and the call of modernist audacity, Lutyens had hit on the formula for Surrey's need to describe itself through its property. He had developed a paradoxical notion of radical moderation, combining the ancient and the modern in a way which resolved, right down to the last window fastening, Surrey's founding function as the collision between two states of mind.

This was a short-lived harmony between sense and sensibility, and Lutyens, in many ways, had lit the blue touch paper which would launch modern Surrey as a paean to pot-pourri and responsible parking. But the idyll couldn't last.

Throughout the 1920s, just when

diagnosis of modernity The Waste Land, Surrey was expanding as a calm and leafy retreat for the equivalently expanding army of London's office workers. And with them came wealth and the politics of self-defence, painting the country bright blue. Repro thatch and proto-Thatcherism would become central to the image of the Surrey idyll. To this end, Surrey estate agencies could advertise the benefits of life in "Sunny Sutton" or "Rural Reigate", playing as much on the family man's fear of urban squalor as on his understandable desire to escape from the pressures of the working day by returning to a secure and comfortable environment, which suited both his income and his attitudes.

Here were the beginnings of Surrey as a colonised Eden for the new suburban classes, in which familiarity would be the keynote of its appeal. It was, in many ways, a chance to start afresh in the face of the 20th-century blues. Every feature of this developing Surrey, from the caves and gables of its "Tudorbethan" villas to the regularity of its commuter trains, seemed to promise not simply a home but a whole way of life. Existence itself could be managed on a suburban scale, with little need of conflict with the threatening world outside. Invading this safe environment with a film crew, one learnt at first hand of the almost invisible surveillance read in the newspaper that an American professor in lowa is testing a new drug, fluvoxamine, that may be able to cure, or at least control, the addictions of shopaholics. The tone of the fluvoxamine article was predictable. "Husbands of those who shop in New York are begging doctors..." etc etc.

This assumption that all shopaholics are women relies upon, and reinforces, a stereotype. This stereotype holds that the average man bitterly resents most expenditure. Most stereotypes are wrong and pernicious. This one is, of course, entirely accurate. Many women I know must wish that an American professor could invent a drug which has the opposite effect to fluvoxamine — and then inject it into their shopaphobic partners.

I suppose there are some bits and pieces that I don't secretly resent paying for. The staples of life. Bread, for instance, I don't mind buying bread. Potatoes. Fruit. Some hardware goods, provided they represent a capital investment, like a new sieve, or a nice Phillips screwdriver, they're OK. Similarly, some durable items of stationery are fine, as are water, salt and breakfast cereal — so long as it isn't some faddish sugary stuff that tastes nice.

Subsistence shopping, in other words — that is my ideal. I do not come close to achieving this ideal, but it remains there in my mind as a sort of dream, a dream to which I hope one day all my shopping will be reduced, a dream against which my behalf. Most men. I think, share this dream. Few of us live it. As Bruce Springsteen wrote on his shamefully underrated 1987 Tunnel of Love album, When I look at myself I don't see! the man I wanted to be! Somewhere along the line I slipped off track. As so often, Bruce is spot on. I feel like I've slipped off track every time I approach the checkout at Sainsbury's with another trolley-load of stuff I essentially disapprove of and feel I ought to live without.

and feel I ought to live without.

Sainsbury's is one thing — other shops are another. On a scale of one to ten, if one indicates a mood of relaxed acceptance of whatever it is I have bought, and ten is boiling mad, then an average trip to Sainsbury's would rate about three. Four to six would be resentment rising through bitterness — most clothes shopping, for example, would register around here, unless I struck particularly lucky and chanced on something I wanted, or better still, needed.

Beyond a score of six, physical pain begins to take over from mere mental anguish. I experience paying for some things — cleaning materials, for instance — as a dull pain in the abdomen, spreading up to the chest and down to the lower intestine if large quantities are involved. A couple of bottles of Jif would be a mild ache. Jif plus some furniture shiny stuff would be more acute. Dettox spray brings on stabs of shooting pain that constrict my entire torso.

The worst symptoms are brought out by what I call Nothing shops, because they sell ... nothing. These shops, which can count up to ten on the scale and never fall below eight, have proliferated in this decade. I say they sell nothing. In truth they sell: candles, small coloured boxes with bits of straw in them, sheets of wrapping paper, a few bits of jewellery (usually earrings, usually involving some metalwork around a bit of local foliage or flotsam), notelets, some lotions, other things that smell, painted pebbles and bits of rock, the odd pot and postcard, mobiles.

Like I said: nothing.

Men, as a rule, cannot understand what it is that these shops sell. Women, as a rule, understand perfectly, because women buy presents for their friends and families. Women see beauty and utility in these shops, which must form a huge part of the British economy. The NHS is said to be the country's biggest employer, with about a million people in its pay. Nothing shops must be a close second. Think about it. Every town of any size in the country has at least one of these shops, usually employing at least four people. Large towns have several. Cities have dozens. London must have hundreds of them. There are certainly more Nothing shop owners and Nothing shop assistants in Britain now than there are coal miners, or teachers, or bus drivers.

I am surprised that people involved with the running of Nothing shops have not yet been identified by the political parties as a vital interest group. Over the next fortnight, they probably will be.

development of Surrey's modern suburbia would keep pace with the expansion of the railway system. Indeed, Surrey and the railways have been locked in an uneasy relationship since the end of the 19th century, with the temper of the idyll being dependent on the tidiness of the timetable. There was even a special "death railway", which ran on the hour from Waterloo to provide the final commute to the London Necropolis Corporation's massive cemetery at Brookwood. Indeed, as Surrey became in-

pioneer West of America.

The railways would become both the symbol of Surrey's retreat from metropolitan life and the totem of its servitude to the routine of commuting. The price of suburban freedom might have been no more than the cost of a season ticket, but Surrey would turn the railways into the scapegoat for all that had been lost with its desire to put a distance between one's desk and one's des. res.

By the property boom of the 1980s, the estate agencies of Surrey would be playing down the necessity for commuting as much as their ancestors had extolled its benefits. Hence an advertisement for a Post-Modern estate near Banstead which claimed, with stretched plausibility, that living on Burgh Heath was like living in Chelsea. Even the most determined of yuppies couldn't fall for that one, any more than residents of deepest Essex would really accept that they were living in Docklands.

Docklands.
Despite being protected by a succession of Green Belts and Green Wedges. Surrey would swiftly find itself being turned away from the idyll of rural suburbia and suburbia and made to face the frustrations attendant on modern commuting. And it was at this point, through the 1950s and 1960s, that Surrey would assume its popular comic function as the most likely setting for Tony Hancock's fictitious suburb of East

Cheam, where the milk float of reality was always collecting the empties of romance. And this notion of Surrey as a self-parodic serf-dom of long-suffering suburbanites, would be extended by The Good Life's hilarious situation comedy of self-sufficiency in Surbiton, with Tom's Thoreauesque attempt to opt out of the rat race being played off against Margot's nouveau riche espousal of suburban

Importantly, Surrey had found its place in the index of modern Englishness as the reverse of its original promise. Where once it had been the county to which one escaped from the pace of London, now it was perceived to be a kind of domesticated prison, in which the stifling weight of its very familiarity could inspire comic melancholy identification of acts of rebellion.

For this reason, perhaps,
Surrey has bred or encouraged some leading outsiders.
The suburban plateau was a launch pad of pop and Surrey had no shortage of rockets.
Quentin Crisp, as the High Priest of Individualism, was born in Sutton, where his sister witnessed a child-molesting actor being held in handcuffs at the station.

Seventy years later, Jamie Reid and Malcolm McLaren would rehearse the outrage of punk rock at Croydon Art College, where Ray Davies of the Kinks had also been a student. And then there would be the morbid humour of Sheena Mackay's novel Redhill Rocco (1986), with its Surrey's twilit position, stranded between two notions of glamour: "To the north of him was London, where no doubt people were passing the cocktail hour in dalliance and adventure and crimes passionnels, and to the south Brighton's palaces of pleasure glittered beside the sea... A departing diesel train hooted and left hanging in the air a floweret of smoke and a feeling of such desolation as it plunged towards Reigate, Betchworth, Deepdene and the green interior."

As a pressure cooker for disaffection, Surrey has produced the dubious distinction for providing one of the highest divorce rates in the country, and a reputation for kinky brothels. It has also opened its doors to Charismatic Christianity, with a penchant for muscular evangelism, which sits at odds with the countless Anglican churches that stand with Victorian sobriety on the edges of its towns and villages.

deposed Edwardiana has finally given way to the IKEA school of apartment living. With the marble halls advanced consumerism, such as Sutton's St Nicholas Centre or Epsom's Ashley Centre providing mothership retailers to a new and more exacting generation of commuters, so the county continues its strange affair between regional independence and modern convenience.

Looking down from the Hog's Back dual carriageway. towards Guildford, one feels one is seeing the universe in miniature, expanding at light speed towards its inevitable implosion. Guildford's cathedral, soaring with opaque splendour through mist, looks down in turn on a world where pay-and-display parking can seem like the alpha and omega of existence. Reversing with supreme self-confidence into some extremely private rhododendrons, I had the sensation of committing an act of unintentional blasphemy.

GARDEN ANSWERS

STEPHEN ANDERTON

Can you suggest an attractive evergreen standard tree to grow in a pot on my shady patio, and which I can plant around seasonally? Something which also flowers please.

— G. Marcus, Stanmore, Middlesex.

The easiest evergreens to find as standards would be bay, or Prunus lusitanica, but there are no flowers to speak of, especially when clipped. It is the clipping or pruning to form a standard which would stop many things flowering, and the shade of course. However, you could use female hollies, for berry colour, if you have males elsewhere nearby. Why not make standards of Viburnum tinus, which flowers over such a long period in winter and early spring. You might even find it as standard in some of the bigger garden centres.

You would need to prune by pinching rather than clipping, and to ease off later in the summer so that potential flower buds are not removed. How about black and white pansies below for winter?

l am looking for some suitable plants to grow in a 100-year-old tapered chimney pot 3ft tall by lift wide. There is a hand-painted design on the top which I would like to keep visible to some extent. — D. Calland, London.

Is it in shade or sun? I always think tall tapered pots look best with a "mob-cap" planting, to balance them. How about a good clump of fancy hostas in shade? Somewhere to stand a good potful of aspidistra or a big spider plant in summer? In sun I would be tempted, with that generous volume of soil, to try a sprawling rose. The new, disease-resistant 'Flower Carpet White' would do the trick, or midpink 'Surrey'. Or you could fill it with a mixture of trailing verbenas, helichrysum, and bidens.

We have a magnificent 14st-high privet hedge which gives us vital privacy but it is 8st thick at the top. We have managed to trim it with help from neighbours, but it is getting beyond us. How might we taper the hedge, to make clipping the top easier, and when should it bedone? — S. Robinson, Seaford, East Sussex.

If you get in there now with a saw, you can cut off your side of the hedge back to the trunk. But privet is not the best of plants for rethickening all the way up. If you find there are several trunks to each plant, cut right down to ground level the outside one or two, to make them sprout from the base. You can then grow a new face up the side of the hedge, without ever losing height. In a couple of years you should cut back the other side too.

I have an aspidistra which I understand will stand anything and cannot be killed. I can kill it. It started with holes across the leaves, and now they are all brown. I have not overwatered it. Please help. — R. Lashbrook, Romford, Essex.

This looks like an attack of vine weevil. I have not heard of vine weevils attacking aspidistra before, but I am not surprised. The best control for them is biological (a nematode), and is available, mailorder only, from Defenders on 01233 813121.

Grottoes are making a comeback in gardens large and small, says Jane Owen

The grotto designed by Belinda Eade for her former house in Shepherd's Bush, London, is encrusted with shells, rocks and pieces of mirror. "Grottoes should be wacky and fun," she says

he ultimate garden accessory during the Renaissance was a grotto. The ancient Greeks and the Romans had them, and some 15th-century Continental gardens could not be seen without them.

They were the upper-crust Disney entertainment of the time, with interiors that traced stories of classical antiquity using statues and mosaic and-shell designs, or which made a thrilling contrast to the rest of the garden by providing a chamber of slime, chill and dankness.

Today Britain, which was gripped by its first grotto craze in the 18th century, is the crucible for a revival in grottoes. Belinda Eade, a former jeweller, took up the art when invited to join the team building a grotto at Leeds Castle in Kent (see below), designed by Vernon Gibberd, one of the modern masters who has just completed another grotto at Kelburn Castle in Ayrshire.

Traditionally, particularly in Britain, grotoes were purely ornamental garden buildings designed to be travelled past or through. But that is changing. Ms Eade's first solo grotto, built in the back garden of her previous house in Shepherd's Bush, London, became more of an outside room where she entertained friends or worked.

Instead of leaving her small backyard to fester damply, she built a remarkable garden room, encrusted with shells, rocks and pieces of mirror. Two curvaceous larger-thanlife-size Native American-style women guard either side of the door into the main house and the vaulted ceiling is decorated grottoes, but I like ones in which you can sit and admire them. Grottoes should change the mood of a garden — they should blow your head off with the change of atmosphere and they should also be wacky and fun.

"The people who bought my house liked my grotto, although I felt ambivalent about leaving it. But you have to move on. I am not going to start another one at my new place because I need to concentrate my energies on other projects," Ms Eade says.

She can sometimes be found touring the fashionable eateries of Notting Hill, west London, in search of mussel and oyster shells for her work. "I prefer English shells to exotic ones," she says.

She finds it difficult to give guide prices for her work because "It depends so much on the scale and the client. What matters is an enthusiastic client who enjoys fantasy". Another grotto enthusiast is the sculptor-turned-land-scaper, George Carter, who built a grotto at the Chelsea Flower Show in 1985 from broken milk bottles, blue glass fragments, timber, lead and mirrors. The work brought in commissions from both sides of the Atlantic.

Grottoes

'Grottoes intensify the mood of a garden. They symbolise the underworld'

Mr Carter says he can design and make a grotto for as little as £1,500, but it would be made from plywood. If that doesn't sound promising, take a look at his work. His eye for perspective and scale make the dark green plywood structures into startling eyecatchers.

"Grottoes are ideal for base.

"Grottoes are ideal for basements in London, which are dark, sunless areas," he says. "But when they are created in gardens they intensify mood. They tend to be gloomy—an antidote to the cheerful parts of the garden, in rather the same way that informality can accentuate the formal parts of a garden. Grottoes tend to be symbolic of the underworld."

Mr Carter, who lives in Norfolk where flint is abundant, often works in stone and says he can design and make a small flint grotto for about £8,000. But he will work in most materials, and he has recently designed a musselshell grotto for the photographer Marianne Majeruss garden in Islington. It will be made of timber and shells and installed at the far end of the small town garden with a huge urn at its centre from which water will trickle into a

Surely, this is the grotto of the future — a massive land-scape feature scaled down for city living.

Leeds Castle folly with encounters of the divine kind

During the mid-Eighties work began on the Leeds Castle grotto. Simon Verity, the garden sculptor, and shell artist Diana Reynell did most of the decorative work, helped by Belinda Eade. This fantastic echo of the underworld is one of the first important grottoes to be built in this country since the 18th century when Henry Hoare commissioned his classic rock grotto at Stourhead in Wiltshire, and Charles Hamilton ordered a shimmering crystal-lined grotto with waterfalls and stalactites for his landscape at Painshill in Surrey.

The designer Vernon Gibberd had never designed a grotto before. He was hired by the trustees of Lecds Castle to make a maze, but as he worked out the Leeds Castle puzzle, he decided to put a mount at the centre. This evolved into a hollow mount into which visitors plunge down a stone spiral, to be met by the massive mask of the god of the underworld Typhoeus, eyes lit from behind and water gushing from his mouth.

The Leeds Castle trustees, who had asked only for a maze, were not impressed, and it was only after a certain amount of pressing that Mr Gibberd's scheme was reluctantly allowed to go ahead. Today the grotto is one of the castle's foremost attractions.

Mr Gibberd has built several grottoes since and has become the "Grotto Man" of the Folly Fellowship. "They couldn't think of another title for me, so this was a made-up one to include me in the Fellowship," says Mr Gibberd, who is building himself a grotto in the grounds of his Elizabethan farmhouse in Wales. The small brick and stone building will have a lookout post on the top and fireplace (decorated with a huge Medusa-like mask) so that Mr Gibberd can use his grotto "for reading or having a drink, even in winter".

How genes ensure the pick of the crop

better and produce disease-resistance varieties, says Stephen Anderton sures of commercial agriculture and horticulture, gardeners might be forgiven for thinking that genetic engineering does not affect us. We would be wrong. The man who wants to prove this to us is Professor John Parker, the new director of the University Botanic Garden in Cambridge. Genetics is the professor's passion and in his first year he intends to demonstrate the effects of genetic changes on familiar plants, such as antirrhinums. Alter a gene, and the antirrhinum flower structure changes remarkably. Alter a couple and you are well on the way to a buttercup

At Cambridge, Professor Parker is running an ornamental garden as well as a research establishment. His aim is to demystify genetics for non-scientists and gardeners. The difference between a cell becoming a cow or an antirrhinum is all a matter of genetics." he says. "and antirrhinums are a very good place to begin showing what genetics can do."

Genetics for gardeners is in its early days, but the John innes Institute in Norwich has found the answer to making antirrhinums flower to the tip. In Wales, the Institute of Grassland and Environmental Research has identified a gene which makes stressed grass stay green longer. This naturally occurring phenome-non is likely to find its way into lawn grasses for drought areas. At laboratories in Britain, Germany, Holland and France, the EU is funding a research project to establish DNA fingerprinting of individual plant varieties, so that those varieties covered by Plant Breeders' Rights cannot be propagated illegally. stands up even better. Such is going to double by 2050."

The creating of a desired

As ever, money and commerce are the spur to research. The amateur gardening mar-ket gains only in spin-offs from commercial agricultural research. But who is to say that in 20 years we will not be able to maintain the availability of historic plant varieties simply by recording the genet-ic lingerprint and recreating it when required?

The humble pea is a good example of genetics at work. It is curious that cultivated peas the world over are self-pollinating, and yet in the wild it still takes two to tangle. But there is a further natural mutation peas in which some of the leaflets become simply tendrils instead. Genetics has identified the cause of this mutation. and this semi-leafless pea has become the staple of the East Anglian frozen-pea industry. Its extra tendrils make it selfsupporting, and the lack of leaf reduces the volume of the haulm, making machine-picking more efficient. When natural mutation affects the gene in a different way, all the leaflets become tendrils, creating a

seed merchants Thompson &

Morgan in the 1980s. Semi-leafless peas have also been selected for their ability to reach ripeness all on the same day. Granted, there are more important things to home gardeners than selfsupporting peas, and rather than simultaneous ripening we prefer successful cropping over a long season, but this is an excellent example of genetic modulation proving both useful and unthreatening.

rofessor Parker says genetic engineering. especially in plants, is not the monster it is sometimes made out to be. "It is really only the speeding up, directing and using of a natural phenomenon.

"When a highly bred crop variety is hybridised with a closely related wild plant, to gain disease resistance, it then takes 10-15 years of backcrossing with high-yield varieties to reach anything like another commercially viable plant. By genetic means, this can be cut to five to ten years useful if the world population

WEEKEND TIPS

Plant onion sets, 6in apart each way, and pushed into the soil until just the tip shows. Sow courgettes, cucumbers and outdoor tomatoes under glass.

Complete pruning of evergreens, including any hard pruning of holly and yew hedges. Lay new lawns, by turf or seed. Repair damaged lawn edges and redefine edges. Overseed thin lawns. Spray fruit trees as necessary for scab and aphids, avoiding spraying when the flowers are open. Early bedding plants should be given maximum fresh air in warm weather, by lifting them out into sunshine.

The creating of a desired genetic pattern by plant selection as we used to know it - by back-crossing and selecting over many years — is called "vertical transmission". But when a gene slips out, producing a result which might have taken decades or more by vertical transmission, the short cut is called "horizontal transmission". It can happen naturally, as a result of viruses, or it can happen through genetic engineering.

If this sounds too powerful a toy for scientists, Professor Parker is rational about possible problems. "It is no use having a plant completely immune to a disease, or it lays itself open to new forms of the disease later," he says. "What we need are plants which can stand the pressure of a particular pathogen, such as mildew, but not succumb to it entirely, so that the plant can go on developing its own resistance to the changing disease."

Only research into genetics will allow scientists to understand what exactly genes do. But it is clear already that certain genes carry similar functions over a whole range of plants. And that some genes control the timing of the function of other genes. So, depending on such timing, a flower may develop to look more like a delphinium than an antirrhinum.

If genetic research could find a solution, for example, to eelworms in potatoes, which is a worldwide problem, it is a potentially much shorter road to using that knowledge to deal with the problem of eelworms in other ornamental garden plants.

Landscape magic by Capability Brown

OPEN THIS WEEKEND

■ Wrest Park, Silsoe, Bedfordshire (01525 860152)

Off A6 east of Silsoe village. Open weekends and bank hols 10am-6pm until Oct 26. £2.75, children El.40, OAPs E2.10

Built on a grand scale during the 18th century for a tea family, the de Greys, Wrest's 150 acres are being restored gradually so that none of the magic of a slightly overgrown landscape is lost. Mown paths lead through wilderness areas to a fine, airy Palladian summer house, classical ruins and unexpected statues and vast Greek vases.

The first sight of the garden is dominated by a big, dull Victorian terrace with parterres and a large number of statues, which give no hint of the enchanting atmosphere beyond. A long canal leads to a large 1710 pavilion by Thomas Archer, a trysting place packed with small rooms and heated by fires hidden behind painted panels. Woodland walks arrive at a serpentine pool with a Chinese pavilion.

The main garden was probably designed by Batty Langley in the early 18th century. Later, some of his work was de-formalised by Capability Brown who, according to family letters, was considered tedious company.

■ Catforth Gardeus, Roots Lane, Catforth, Lancashire (01772 690561)

Six miles NW of Preston. Open daily 10.30am-5pm until mid Sept. £2, children 50p, OAPs £1.50

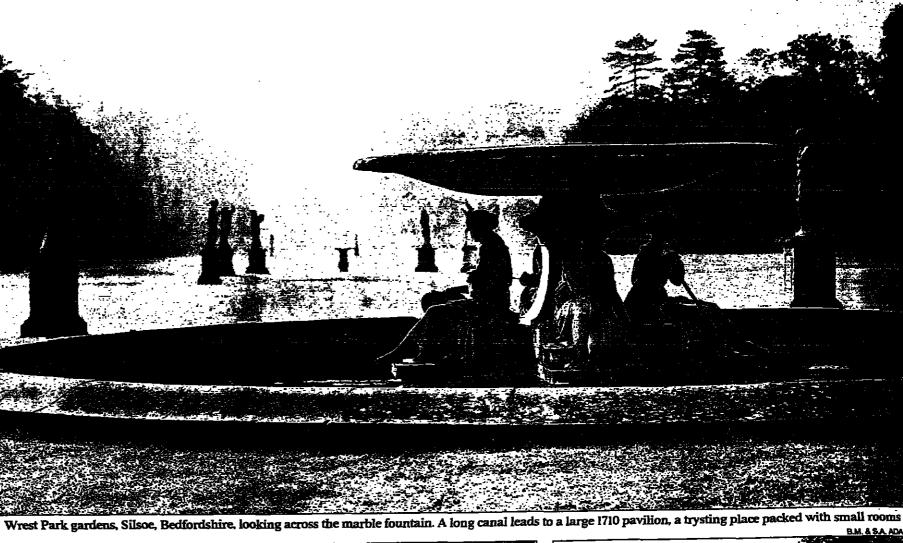

This unusual two-and-a-half-acre garden is a testimony to managing excellent planting with minimal watering, enforced by an 18-month hosepipe ban. Thick mulches and appropriate planting have reduced the need for water almost to nil. It is also a testimony to friendship - a co-operative venture between neighbours Tony and Judith Bradshaw and Christine and Bill Moore. The Bradshaws' bungalow garden, which is planted with spring bulbs, shrubs, trees and perennials to give year-round col-our, now links into the Moores' cottage garden, which is planted around their farmhouse.

The neighbours admit to being 'plantaholics" and so joined forces (and gardens), adding a nursery. from which they sell a wide range of plants, including 150 varieties of geranium. They have about 400 varieties, which now make up the National Collection of geraniums. Some of the woodland varieties will be in bloom now. Other attractions include flowering cherries, azaleas, spotty-leaved pulmonaria, spring bulbs and about 20 varieties of dicentra, including D. Brownie which flowers from now until late July and has pale pink flowers and blue-grey foliage that turns brown as it ages. The Bradshaws' bungalow garden, with its stream, waterfall, pond and bog garden, all started from bare lawn 13 years ago, is the oldest of the two gardens. The Moores' garden was a cricket pitch until eight years ago and now the planting is complemented by two pools and a waterfall. A new garden, started four years ago in a paddock, has large pools and a former pit has been transformed into a water lily pool, all of them lined with clay.

The Plantation Garden. 4 Earlham Road, Norwich (01603 611669)

Close to St John's Cathedral. Entrance between Crofters Hotel and Beeches Hotel. Open Suns only until mid Oct, 2-5pm. Private visits by appointment only. £1, children free

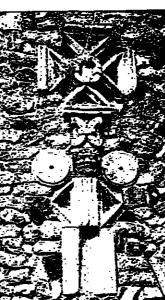

Tomorrow this three-acre garden close to Norwich city centre will be open to raise funds for the National Gardens Scheme. Volunteers have spent the past 17 months restoring this Victorian suburban garden, which was made originally by a cabinet maker/property developer named Henry Trevor.

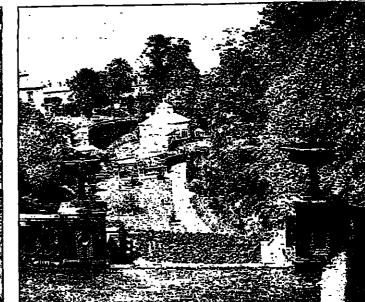

The garden is in a chalk quarry and designed in romantic, picturesque style, with walks along the side of the quarry. A Gothic fountain towers 30ft and various medieval style "ruins" dot the garden. Even the propagating house has medieval arcading, and the garden walls are made of flint and brick, echoing the vernacular ecclesiastical style. Gargoyles are set into some of the walling. alongside ornamental bricks from mock medieval chimneys, which were all the rage locally in the second half of the 19th century when the garden was being formed. Church windows have been used to decorate some of the walls and one face of the quarry has a 60ft-long terrace with pedes-tals, balustrades and urns. Next year the Plantation Garden Preservation Trust hopes to restore the rustic bridge.

Funds do not stretch to elaborate planting but mature trees give a peaceful atmosphere to the place where the hum of city traffic is hardly audible. I find that the cares of the world drop away when I am here," says Sheila Adam, who organises the garden tours.

Oak panelling and stained glass give Elm Lodge a baronial air. Ronald Faux visits a house built in the grand manner

The drawing room has oak panelling and a brass fireplace

Victorian drama in Lakeland

Appearances were important. "I found the Eden Valley by accident. I came to buy the steam engine turntable in Appleby, which was a hefty tonnage, and I grew really to appreciate this corner of Cumbria. It is extremely peaceful and undisturbed. I asked what was on the market and ended up with Elm Lodge, seven bedrooms, a full-size billiards table and 16 acres. It has been our family home ever since." he says.

As a scrap metal dealer's residence, Elm Lodge ranks as a property from Harold Steptoe's wilder fantasies. It was built on a grand scale by a Victorian with an eye for style and position. The grey slate roof, stout walls and commanding turret rising above a fringe of mature woodland hint of Balmoral, with the Howgill fells doubling for the hills of Deeside and forming a magnificant back-

side by a stand of trees from which the house takes its name.

When the Bradford-Nutters moved there, the house had a gloom chiefly attributable to a 45volt electrical system, installed in the days before the National Grid brought bright lights to Raven-stonedale. Dark oak panelling, some dating from the 17th century and recovered from Brougham Hall, a demolished Cumbrian mansion, probably added to a sombre atmosphere which has been dispelled by transforming the power system and redecorating with brightness and good taste. Original Victorian features have been retained in a house that was built and had been owned by only one family before the Bradford-Nutters moved in.

Elm Lodge has always been a family home but the children have now moved away and their parents are moving to a 13th-century hall near Clitheroe, closer to grandchildren and business interests. Mr Bradford-Nutter throws wide the oak door of a small room. "This is a wonderful feature," he says, gestur-ing grandly towards a magnificent florally decorated lavatory, a throne among thrones, called the Deluge. When the chain is pulled the Deluge performs as its name suggests. There is another one downstairs. They work superbly," he says. Grand closets are complemented by huge baths and plumb-

The main bedroom is large, almost 21ft wide, with number two bedroom running off it. The latter was once a 17ft-wide dressing room. suggesting that the Victorians required plenty of elbow room to struggle into their bustles, corsets or starched collars. Every bedroom at Elm Lodge once had a dressing room that has now become another bedroom, making seven in all. Two other dressing rooms remain true to their original purpose yet are large enough to accommodate a single bed comfortably.

Oak panelling decorates the drawing room with its wide arched bay, marble and brass fireplace and hand-embossed copper-look wallpaper. Oak panels reach the full height of the 26st-wide dining room, which has more oak in the strip flooring, as well as leaded light windows set in sandstone mullions and a minster fireplace. The sombre ambience is relieved by large white ceiling panels.

ne imposing room leads to the next; a morning room in a cool shade of blue, a billiards room Nutter, a man of many parts in his time, from beer taster on behalf of the Customs and Excise and boxing promoter to cargo fleet operator and breeder of Highland cattle, has little time for the game.

The original billiards room is now the kitchen-cum-breakfast room with a central island unit, Rayburn oil-fired stove and double oven. Concealed lights shine from a vaulted pine-lined ceiling. French windows lead from the new billiards room into a large conservatory that catches warmth both from the sun and from the central heating boiler housed in a cellar beneath the ceramic tiled floor. Outdoors, beyond a walled garden and stable block, the grounds of Elm Lodge stir with springtime. A silver pheasant struts across one of the lawns noisily demanding a mate, and the first signs of life show in the shrubs and flower beds. In a few more weeks there will be massed ranks of rhododendrons.

Mature woodland with some exotic trees, among them a giant redwood planted in Victorian times, give Elm Lodge a sense of seclusion, screening even the tower of St Oswald's church, where the last Protestant woman in England to be executed for her faith is commemorated in the cast window. The year was 1638 and the Judge was George Jeffreys.

In those days the land between Stone Gill and Scandal Beck, largely open fields and life, certainly for Protestants, was less healthy. These days, Mr Bradford-Nutter insists, Eden's reputation for health and harmony is confirmed by official statistics.

The last Census recorded only 2.7 per cent of all residents over 16 classed as permanently sick. Only 9 per cent of children came from single-parent families, 23 per cent of households were occupied by married couples, twice the proportion compared with Kensington and Chelsea, and only 4.5 per cent of economically active adults were unemployed. Surely as close to an earthly paradise as you can get

year and a half ago Diane Aben and Ted Allen bought a flat in a converted brewery near the City of London The mahogany-panelled octagonal room which served as the managing director's office is now their sitting room. The room has two large arched windows, one overlooking a busy road and the other a courtyard. The couple wanted something to cover the win-dows but did not like the idea of curtains or blinds hanging right from the top of the wall. Eventually they decided on Roman blinds for the square part of the windows and stained glass for the two shallow arched areas. We wanted a design which was modern, warm and unusual, not something that included fish or flowers," Miss Aben says.

They approached the stained glass artist Susan Ashworth, who after talking at length with the couple came up with three designs. "It is very important to see the site and to meet the people who are commissioning you. They're not just buying something which can be taken off the wall some time later, because stained glass will be part of the building. There should be no misunderstanding of what every-one's intentions are," Mrs Ashworth

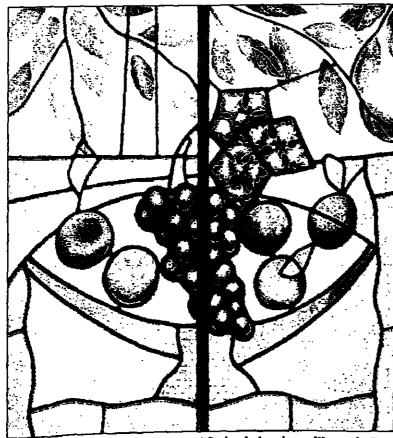

Once the design (abstract) and colour (green, white and flashes of orange) had been decided, the two windows took about a month to make. They were made from glass, mouth blown in Sunderland. The cost was less than

"I was ecstatic when they were put in. Because of the changing light they always look different, almost alive, but they march the room as well," Ms Aben

Mrs Ashworth is an associate member of the British Society of Master Glass Painters (BSMGP), a 500-mem-ber body which has a "Crafisman's Index" giving details of those fellows and associates willing to undertake new commissions. People ask for stained glass windows for all sorts of situations - to mask an unsightly view, to create privacy, or just to give a pleasing effect. "Serious thought should be given to the architectural setting for the intended window and the lighting conditions of the location. The more carefully the initial brief is prepared, the more satisfactory will be the end result," says Ruth Cooke, secretary of the BSMGP.

Slides or photographs of earlier commissions can usually be supplied by the artists to assist with selection. although the society does recommend going to see examples of the artist's

"Most people think it's going to be incredibly expensive, but nine times out of ten you are only talking about hundreds of pounds," says stained glass artist Caroline Benyon, a fellow of the BSMGP, who also believes in plenty of preparatory work with the

Mrs Benyon has done a large variety of windows for people's homes. An underwater cameraman, for instance, wanted fish and corals on his front door, another client had a coat of arms with personal motifs in the surrounding diamond panes, and for the owner of a former dairy she designed abstract cows in blue and white. "I think stained glass windows can be a definite selling point for a house if the incoming people like the design," Mrs Benyon says.

lan Beattie commissioned her to make a 7ft square window for an inside door at his home in Guernsey. For a long time he deliberated over its design, then one day a brochure arrived in the post advertising tapestry cushion covers.

"One cover had a pleasing medieval hunting picture with dogs, hawks and trees. I liked the pre-Raphaelite style of it, so that decided me," he says. His window will have a similar picture as the centrepiece, and around the borders there will be a large number of animals and flowers, so that each time he looks at it, he says, he will see something different.

n general, once there is agreement between artist and client, the artist , will make a cartoon, which is a fullsized drawing of the window showing the design and the lead lines. The glass will then be cut.

Glass is coloured in the manufacturing process, but additionally it can be painted by the stained glass artist. This involves the application of oxides of various metals, enamels and sometimes silver stain, which the artist then fires in a kiln.

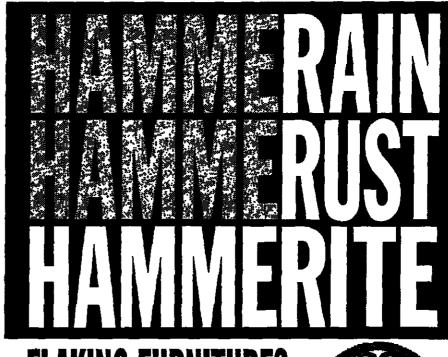

The glass is finally cemented into the pieces of lead which have been soldered together. New lead and new stained glass should last well over 100 years before weakening.

Stained glass can change the whole atmosphere of a room. It's the most dynamic thing you can do to a hole in the wall," Mrs Ashworth says.

The Times has linked up with the Cosmopolitan Show to offer you the chance to win a Ford Ka, billed as the sports car for the city; or one of 25 pairs of tickets to the show's star studded Gala Opening evening on May I. The stylish Ka gives a terrific drive. Neat and nimble it has excellent handling and roadholding. In town the tightest parking space is yours, while on the open road the response is better than many a larger car. The interior is the best thing in the marketplace at the moment and safety features include a driver's airbag and a chassis strengthened at key points to absorb crash impact. It does 0-60mph in 13.8 seconds with a top speed of 96mph.

Readers are also offered the chance to win one of 500 pairs of tickets to the Cosmopolitan show at London's Earls Court from Friday May 2 to Monday May 5. The show will play host to celebrities, leading fashion designers and stars from the hair and beauty world and features a dual runway catwalk — the first of its kind in the UK - that will host fashion shows every hour on the hour. Top hair and make-up experts Nicky Clarke and Chase Aston will be demonstrating their secrets on the Hair and Beauty stage. And the latest in health, fitness and lifestyle trends will be revealed on the The Health and Fitness stage.

It's not the number but the size of rooms that is appealing more to urban buyers, says Faith Glasgow

Space – the final frontier?

bedroom family homes of suburbia and, beyond that, with rambling gardens and rural bliss. An urban existence is thought of as physically restricting, the cramped confines being traded off against

But it doesn't have to be that way - and the signs are that some buyers are prepared to pay a premium for the luxury of space with their urban home. They want to be at the heart of the metropolis and to be comfortable in stylish. spacious accommodation; they also want to make a statement about modern taste and urban chic.

Such buyers are looking for stunning spaces, rather than a raft of reception and "spare" rooms. They are singles or couples with little interest in extra bedrooms for children, for children are not part of the picture. This is grown-ups' territory.

Hence, the number of bedrooms in a home is less significant as a measure of desirability than the square footage.

The idea of space for city dwellers has its roots in the loft apartment culture of New York, where it is not uncommon to find a two-bedroom home of more than 2,000 sq ft. To put that into perspective, an average two-bedroom flat in the UK would be about 700-900 sq ft. In London, there has been a rash of loft-like conversions of warehouse, office blocks and municipal buildings over the past two years.

And the trend for urban space is not confined to private accommodation. London's newest and trendiest watering holes and restaurants — the Oxo Tower, Mezzo, Bank have all made their mark as much through large-scale, dramatically designed interiors as through the food served. Space is the new indulgence, we are told. Nina Richards is a space enthusiast. Her two-bedroom maisonette in Battersea, southwest London, is comfortable and has a low mortgage but, she says, it will no longer pacious living has traditionally been associated conventional flat," she says. "I'm obsessed with the idea of space. It obsessed with the idea of space. It started as a whim a few weeks ago, then I heard about a nearby school conversion by Sapcote and went to have a look round. I couldn't believe my eyes —I went back to my flat and felt like knocking all the

Yet the only flat she can afford, at £155,000 for a 1,300 sq ft shell, is partly below ground. "I like it because it has an outside space and a sunken floor, and there are light wells, so it's not dark. It is a compromise on the loft idea -- but I have to compromise to afford this sense of space."

She expects to spend a further £60,000-£70,000 on designing and creating the interior she wants: a single bedroom, whitewashed brick, sandblasted glass walls. beechwood floors. "It'll be minimal-ot everyone is as enthusiastic about the merits of space as a selling point, however. At Regalia, chairman David Goldstone says that if a developer is convert-ing lofts and warehouses, and finds the positioning of the windows and the high ceilings would make for awkward interior walls and dark or badly proportioned rooms, he will make a virtue out of the space, despite its potential drawbacks and impracticalities.

"We perceive an optimum size for different rooms," he says. "A drawing room of, say, 300sq ft (20ft by 15ft) is a substantial space, but 400 sq ft is too much. Why pay more for the extra 100 sq ft you don't need?"

Nonetheless, the success of such conversions indicates that people are being seduced by large dimensions; and there is evidence that it is having an effect in the more conventional flat market, too. According to Peter Rollings at Foxton's South Kensington branch, large one-bedroom flats are commanding prices over £225,000. "We have a one-bedroom flat in

Meanwhile, at Friend and Faicke's Clapham office, Guy Fos-ter cites a two-bedroom flat in SW2 on the market at £375,000. "Buyers gasp when they see the price," he says, "but when they realise it is a huge apartment spanning 3,250 sq ft with a massive reception room, they understand why."

The trend is undoubtedly a top-of-the-market one. "Not long ago, everyone was concerned about the number of rooms for the price," says developer Anthony Lassman. who deals with prime central London property. But that has changed. For example, a flat in Eaton Square, SWI, was bought last summer for £2.8 million. It's big — 3.150 sq ft — and originally it had three bedrooms and a maid's room; but the new owners have spent another £500,000 knocking if it were on the open market now there would be buyers fighting for it," he says.

Mr Lassman is currently converting a three-bedroom Mayfair mews house to two bedrooms and one huge reception room; it will come onto the market at about £800,000. These projects used to be regarded as bold, and you risked narrowing your market too much. But now there is so much evidence from new buyers that they want space that I feel confident provided the property is in the right

THINKING IN SQUARE FEET

isualising square footage or meterage is second nature for international buyers; but there is no tradition of quoting a single area figure (or, by extension, of calculating price per square foot) in the UK residential property market. The British think in terms of numbers of bedrooms and reception rooms, with individual floor measurements thrown in.

But the signs are that some British buyers are becoming more familiar with the notion of floorspace. "We're starting to include square footage and square meterage, which we never used to do," says Peter Rollings at Foxton's. "The British buy rooms, but increasingly people are insisting that they must have at least 1,500 sq ft."

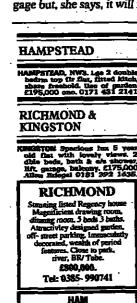

In part that's a consequence of the strength of the international market in London over the past few years; overseas buyers expect such details and agents have become much more familiar with them. Mr Rollings also cites the introduc-tion of the Property Misdescription Act, restricting estate agents' literary prowess to facts alone in their details of properties. "Square footage and floorplans are as factual as you can get," he says.

The trend also reflects the interest in shell conversions, where there are no rooms to count and, even if there were, they would give little indication of the true extent of an apartment. At Knight Frank, Charles Barclay gives the example of the St Peter's development in Covent Garden. London. "The units were about 1,500 sq ft, sold as shells at £420 per ft [which amounts to about £600,000], and all, without exception, were made into two-bedroom flats. In terms of price per bedroom, then it's not a very good deal."

quare footage does make it easier to compare like with like. If you're quoted a price of £600,000 for 1,000 sq ft, then you're probably paying too much. Conversely, the opportunity to buy 600 sq ft at £200,000 in a central London development such as County Hall sounds very attractive. But there is a danger of over-simplification, as

Nicholas Pearce of Beaney Pearce says: "People can be misled when they hear that the flat or house next door achieved £500 per ft, and think it is applicable to them. But you still need to take into account the view, the amenities and the condition of the property."

So although the trend towards square footage is likely to continue, and is a useful tool in conjunction with other details, don't expect room numbers to go away. "The average buyer is not familiar with square footage, and you can't use it in traditional family areas where room numbers are important," says developer Anthony Lassman. "Customers don't visualise square footage easily." Mr Rollings says. "I still take them to have a look at the property itself."

presentation can add value to your

urfing the crest of a wave in a rising market demands a certain flair for "tarting up" a property without spending a fortune. So long as a house's size and position are right, stylish presentation can maximise its price.

Caroline and Nicholas Shott

bought a four-bedroom house in Lavender Hill, south London, last summer for £215,000 but Mr Shott decided he did not like it. So Mrs Shott spent about £6,000 and ten days on improvements, such as painting inside and out, replacing the front door and having curtains made. Four months later, Foxton's sold the house for a good deal more — E252,000 and Mrs Shott even took the new curtains with her.

Mrs Shott, a partner in Carter Shott, a Battersea agency which lets top-of-the-market properties, also acts as a property-finding agent for buyers. The demand for property in London is similar to that of the 1980s. but the supply isn't there," she says.
"People will offer more than your asking price if the house is well

Giles Underhill of Foxton's Battersea office, says: "Mrs Shott's house is a good example of how you can transform something by spending comparatively little money. We found that, even when the market was sluggish, stylish developers were still getting exceptional prices. And if three houses in the same street are for sale, the most stylish place will sell first — and for more.

"The people who spend the most are those who earn the most and have the least time to spend on decorating. They will pay a premium to move straight into somewhere they like." So what is Mrs Shott's advice to those considering a make-over of their house before selling? "Clear away your clutter - 1980s style frills and fuss are a real turn-off now. Go for simple things, like displaying eggs in a kitchen basket and hanging up a pretty chopping board. Cover a grotty sofa or chair with a bedspread or throw. Paint the front door and shine, replace with new." she says. I can't stress too strongly the importance of a house's exterior. Behind the low front wall of a house I sold in Battersea was crazy paving, which I changed to bricks laid in a herringbone pattern. The bay window had a flat roof, so I had a builder put a little curved lead end roof on that, cracked window sills were repaired and the front door was repainted. We're not talking big money here, but the house suddenly became one of the smartest in the street and sold for our asking

Garry Cook of Roomservice Finishing Group, Chessington, Surrey, whose company dresses show houses, says: "If there's a lot of prop-erty available in the area, you want yours to be memorable, and you can achieve that by using imagination in one room, say a child's bedroom. But its best to err on the neutral side. The real trick is to appeal to the broadest cross-section possible."

Good kitchens are still prime selling points, and he suggests painting or replacing kitchen cupboard doors for a neat up-date. "Presentation all comes down to cleanliness, and smell is very important. Do make the lavatory smell sweet. All your senses are working overtime when you go into a property, and first ebecca Read, of Cluttons residential department, also offers some tips. "What you're selling is the atmosphere of the property and you need to look at it through the eyes of a prospective buyer coming through the door for the first time," she says.

We've just sold a fairly modern house in Chelsea for £920,000 that the owner bought for £620,000 in 1993. She didn't spend a fortune, but she redid the house in this cool. uncluttered look with pale carpets and walls and good modern furniture. She was ahead of her time."

But, she says, any house can be made to look its best on very little outlay. "Clean the windows, remove net currains, or at least wash them. Get as much light through the windows as possible," she suggests. Shampoo carpets, buy plain double bedspreads (preferably white) to cover your duvets. If you have pets, or are a smoker, open windows to get rid of the smell. If the garden looks forlorn, sweep up any leaves and put in bedding plants."

Interior decorator Joanna Wood, who has a shop in Pimlico, central London, specialises in residential developments and show houses. "The frills and flowers of the 1980s hid a multitude of flaws and now people are looking at the bones of a building," she says.

"You don't need a total redecoration. Ditch your clutter, don't have three chairs where one will do, stick to one bottle of bath essence, try to get as much off the surfaces as possible. Replace fussy curtains with blinds.

"Lighting is important: you could invest in low-voltage fittings which give a modern feel. If you want to go further, throw out carpets, then sand, polish or varnish floorboards or parquet and use rugs."

PROPERTY NEWS

THERE is little sign of preelection jitters in the country house market, Amanda Loose writes. Cluttons says people are far more pre-occupied with the shortage of property for sale, while John D. Wood reports an increase in people making pre-emptive bids well in excess of the asking price before active marketing begins.

■ HOUSE prices in prime central London sites rose by 7.7 per cent in the first quarter of 1997, according to Savills. The highest rise for houses was 14.5 per cent in Belgravia.

Granny's wisdom, and her cure-all remedies, had their origins in rural life, but now the species is in danger of becoming extinct

ou can argue that depopulation of the countryside will have disastrous consequences for all forms of rural activity, but has anyone given any thought to what it will do for the general wisdom of the nation? No one worries about wisdom; there are no league tables to measure it, you cannot take a degree in it. it has not (yet) been argued over in the general election. Wisdom is not high on anybody's agenda, but we all recognise wisdom when we hear it and, if you think about it, where you hear it most often is on the lips of granny.

It is highly likely that much of what has come to be accepted as "granny's wisdom" had its origins in rural life. So what is to happen when the landscape is devoid of grannies, as it is in some parts of hedges and trees?

This is no idle concern. Older people find rural living increasingly difficult, with sparse bus services, closure of village shops, inability to get anywhere without a car. Country grannies could disappear as easily as the skylark, and we shall not notice till we wake up one morning and miss their sweet song. Then it will be too late, because granny will have taken up her hot water bottle and fled to sheltered accommodation, leaving owls as sole guardians of rural wisdom.

The vital role of a granny in the world of wisdom has been brought home to me by a book called Grannies' Remedies. It was published in the 1950s and there have been many similar ones. Note: no sister-in-law's remedies, brother's remedies, or tips from second cousins twice removed. Granny's remedies appear to be the only ones that work. But are the present generation of grannies laying down contemporary understanding for future generations before grannies disappear from rural life for ever?

I would like to quote from this slim volume and show precisely the nature of the threat. Let us start with the common cold. It has plagued us for centuries, and science seems no closer to a cure than it was 50 years ago. But granny is on top of it: "Walk with the toes turned outward. Walk with the chin-slightly above the horizontal line, as if looking at the top of a man's hat in front of you, or at the eaves or roof of a house. Walk a good deal with your hands pressed behind you. Sit with the lower part of your spine chair-back." If this did not work, you could "wring out a piece of flannel in boiling water, sprinkle it with turpentine and lay it on the chest". Or, better: "Grandmother knew a man who claimed to have cured himself of the flu by putting into his boots a half-gill of hot whisky and putting his boots on instantly." For complete control of all colds and flu I suppose you could do all three at once, at the risk of walking down the street looking and smelling like a haughty, alcoholic painter and decorator. My own granny's method involved a towel, a large bowl, steaming water and inhaling balm. I recall the name "Mentholatum". Is this still made? I hope so; a sharp sniff of it would recapture childhood days for me like rice pudding does for others. On occasions, when the large bowl could not be found, a chamber pot was used, and I am sure the likes of

DOWN TO EARTH

Dr Antony Clare would explain my present character by pointing out that formative years spent with head under towel, inhaling vapours while staring deep into a chamber pot, wondering when it was last used, can lead to all sorts of troubles in later life. I suppose every generation needs something to sniff. At least the worst ours did was give us chamber-pot phobia for life.

always told you never to speak with your mouth full? "A man's body and his mind are like a jerkin and a jerkin's lining: rumple the one, you rumple the other. Chatted food is half digested." It was not to preserve fellow diners from the sight of the open gob that we were required to close mouths while eating, it was to stop the chat.

eating, it was to stop the chat.

Of course, many of the sources on which granny's wisdom is based relied on the collection of evidence which is no longer there. For example, it was all very well for a 19th-century granny to tell us. "If you poke the fire and it burns brightly, your sweetheart is in a good temper", but what useful portents can a modern granny gleam from the behaviour of a central heating boiler? What use is the certain knowledge that, "If your apron falls away from your waist, a new baby is on the way" when the number of women of child-bearing age who these days wear aprons can be chalked on one side of a slate. And does, "If you buy a broom in May, you're sure to sweep a correse away" apply to yaquum cheapers?

Clearly there is much wisdom which has outlived its time, but it would be a cruel shame if we were to lose the essential truths that only granny collected. So thank you, granny, for "A handful of good life is better than a bushel of good learning", and may you soon be added to that list of vulnerable species classified as wise old birds.

National nature reserves are costly to manage and restore, so a new

commercial solution has been found

ing's Wood has always deserved to be in nature's premier league. This distinguished jumble of oak and silver birch is almost certainly a remnant of the original wildwood, the arboreal carpet that rolled across the land bridge from Europe after the retreating ice 7,000 years ago to cover most of Britain.

Let's extend the football analogy. Until recently the prime ancient woodland at Heath and Reach, near Leighton Buzzard in Bedfordshire, has been playing in too low a division for its pedigree; less than fully fit and no pride in its appearance.

And that's how things would have stayed in the old days of relegation and no promotion for nature habitat. But in wildlife protection today, as in sport, money talks. Redland Aggregates, owner of part of the wood, has signed an agreement with English Nature and won promotion

In 1995, English Nature elevated a 70-acre segment of King's Wood which Redland owns from a mere site of special scientific interest (SSSI) to a national nature reserve (NNR). Exploiting a previously little-used clause in the 1981 Wildlife and Country-side Act. the company effectively bought entry into the top habitat designation in Britain — there are only 184 NNRs — by agreeing to manage the wood into better

This spring Redland began to fell the wood's alien features: hundreds of conifers illadvisedly planted among the oaks in the late 1950s. Last year it coppiced many of the wood's small-leafed limes. Stygian gloom has been replaced by sunlight, breeze and birdsong. There are high hopes that the white admiral, purple emperor and other butterflies and delicate woodland flowers will return, and that one of the few colonies of adder in the county can ex-

Far from flagging it offside, conservationists are applauding the deal with Redland, the first and so far the only one involving a private company. Dr Simon Lyster, the directorgeneral of the Wildlife Trusts, is untroubled by the partial privatisation of nature conservation. "I have no problem with this. The important thing is that we have well managed NNRs. If industry is willing to take on the financial burden, that's good for conservation. We should all be delighted."

In an ideal world there would be many more NNRs. Their regular maintenance, the cutting, thinning and scrub control which is crucial to their health and survival, would be paid for out of public funds, just as farmers get EU subsidies to achieve better grain harvests.

However, English Nature finds it difficult enough to eke out its annual grant from the Treasury to pay for essential management on the NNRs it owns outright, or looks after in agreement with landowners. let alone create new ones and spread a meagre budget ever more thinly. But when it took over as the body responsible for nature conservation in England in 1991, English Nature found a way of extending its estate of NNRs without increasing its financial com-mitment. It blew the dust off a provision in the Wildlife Act, put in at the insistence of the voluntary conservation sector but hardly taken up.

he provision in Section 35 of the Act allows for new NNRs to be created and run by "approved bodies" — organisation, public or private — which can show they have the resources and expertise to fund and run a long-term management programme.

Only two Section 35 NNRs had been designated by the old Nature Conservancy Council up to 1991. Since then, its successor, English Nature, has promoted Section 35 more vigorously and in five years has approved a further 29.

The new NNRs are owned and maintained by nature trusts, local authorities and large conservation bodies, such as the National Trust. In 1995, Redland became the first industrial organisation to gain "approved body" status. Its 70 acres in King's Wood were added to an existing, adjoining Section 35 NNR, created in 1993 and run by Bedfordshire County Council and the county wildlife trust.

Redland, Britain's fourth biggest aggregates company, acquired its part of King's Wood in the 1960s with a view to tapping the rich reserves of sand beneath it. When it realised the wood's ecological importance, the company abandoned any plans to quarry there.

The conservation programme in the wood is directed by Ron Foster, Redland's

Ron Foster, the restoration manager of Redlands Aggregates, which is managing King's Wood, near Leighton Buzzard, Bedfordshire, as a nature reserve instead of quarrying for sand restoration manager. He uses contractors to fell the conifers and open up a network of sunny, sheltered rides as habitat for butterflies and flowers. Mr Foster admits there is no profit for the company in the wood. The small return on the felled timber just about covers extraction costs. "I think the private landowner would be highly unlikely to set off on a project like this." he says.

hy does a company, with duties to its shareholders, involve itself in a such an uncommercial activity? "We have a fair reputation in restoring land we have quarried. I felt we were getting to the stage where that was not enough in itself, that we ought to show we are good land managers as well—we own a lot of land which there is never any chance of us

n pro- working," Mr Foster says. is direct- English Nature describes edland's the agreement with Redland as a landmark, which it hopes other companies will follow. It has announced an ambitious target of designating ten new Section 35 NNRs a year over the next three years.

"We must be bold and try it." says the Wildlife Trusts' Dr Lyster. "These days, we shouldn't just be hanging on to what we have, but trying to restore and recover habitat. Let's get as many sites as we can up to NNR quality. If that means the private sector becoming involved, so be it.

"It doesn't worry me that Redland is the only company involved so far. Let's see how it gets on. If it makes a success of it and gets some good PR, maybe other companies will follow. I would rather take it slowly and see it done successfully than have a whole rash of NNRs go into the private sector without proper thought and have it go wrong."

ON THE SPOT: NORTH NORFOLK COAST

Rural recommendations
The place: Burnham Overy Staithe.

The view: To the north, Scolt Head Island nature reserve and Gun Hill across the spookily atmospheric creeks and salt marshes bordering the North Sea. To the south, Burnham Overy Mill in an undulating landscape. Plus, dramatic skies. The appeal: A perfect walk (to the sea) along the dyke. Abundant bird life (oystercatchers, dunlins, herons, barn owls) and few people. The beach at Holkham Bay stretches for ever and is usually deserted. The area is a paradise for the watercolourist. It is the most peaceful spot in England, and the sound of boats' rigging against metal masts is pure music.

Aficionados: Sailors, twitchers and walkers.

Historical interest: A haunt of Nelson's boyhood (he was born in 1758 in nearby Burnham Thorpe) and little has changed since. The high-water mark of the devastating 1978 flood is painted on the wall of Peter Beck's Boathouse.

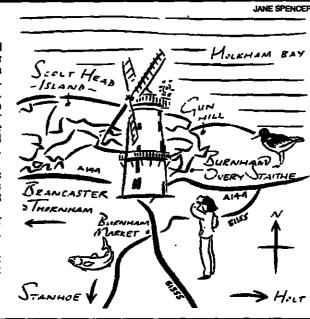

Time of the day/time of year to visit: Summer evenings, of course, but winter days, too — the biting wind can be bracing.

OS reference: 345 443 (Landranger 132).

Also nearby: The Lifeboat pub at Thornham and the Crown at Stanhoe. Plus: Gurney's fishmongers at Burnham Market

EASTER JUMBO ANSWERS

The six winners of the Easter Jumbo Crossword (Weekend, March 29), who will each receive £100, are: T. Boon of Ware, Hertfordshire: P. Clegg of Cambridge: B. Gatley of Manchester; R. Morris of Middlesbrough; M. Rupp of Canterbury, Kent; D. Thyer of Llanyravon, Cwmbran, Gwent.

THIS WEEKEND the spring migration is at its height. Already chilf-chaffs, blackcaps, willow warblers and sedge warblers have spread across the British Isles and are singing lustily in their newly reclaimed territories. The warm, stable weather has encouraged them, and the first chiffichaffs arrived very early—many of them were back from the Mediterranean before mid-March.

At the beginning of this month there was a lull in chiffchaff movement, perhaps because of cool north winds that they were reluctant to fly into, but last week they were pouring into Britain again. I heard one singing in the Luxembourg Gardens in Paris ten days ago. Perhaps it was about to set off for the Princes Street Gardens in Edinburgh.

Blackcaps were also early this year

— I heard my first one singing on March 31 as it chased flies in a sallow bush — and there have been many reports of early swallows.

Now the habitually later arrivals are coming in — the nightingales and tree pipits, the reed warblers and whitethroats. Cuckoos are also appearing. One should be cautious, however, of reports of cuckoos. The collared dove, which invaded Britain from the Balkans 40 years ago and is now a common resident, has a triple "coo-coo-coo" call (with an emphasis on the middle syllable), and is often

Spring songsters fly in

mistaken for the Cuculus canorus that "singeth as she flies". (But the old song, though charming, is also wrong, since it is the male cuckoo that calls: the female has a quite different bubbling note.)

Among the small passerine species, males almost invariably come first and stake out their territories in the kind of habitat they prefer. The earlier they come, the more chance they have of seizing a territory with the right kind of cover for their nest and adequate food supplies. But if they arrive too early they may starve because there are not enough insects out and about. As with practically everything else in nature, it is getting the balance right that counts.

The female birds arrive on average ten or 14 days later than the males. Like the males, they return to the area they were born in or nested in the previous year, and the older birds may sometimes pair up with their previous mate. However, it is the females who go around choosing, and the males woo them with the vigour of their songs and displays. It is a real marriage market, and the females instinctively choose the mate and the territory that they think will serve them best. As for fidelity afterwards, that we now know is another matter...

Over the whole of Europe and Asia, it has been estimated that there are two to three billion bird visitors from Africa every summer. Perhaps double that number leave for Africa again every autumn, after the breeding season, and half of those die before the flight back again next spring. The commonest visitor to Europe is the willow warbler, with something like 200 million breeding pairs in the birch woods and copses and spinneys from St Petersburg to Co Cork. Yet we do not see many of them on the wing. These great waves of birds move inconspicuously up from the south, often flying by night or in the first hours of the morning, and pausing to rest and feed after each stage.

SOME SUMMER visitors that are common to the east or south of Britain stray off their route or overshoot the mark, and cause some excitement when they are seen on these shores. Already a few hoopoes have been recorded this year, plodding about on garden lawns or flying up like enormous, striped, pink butterflies.

Wrynecks used to be common in Britain but now this country is right at the edge of their range, and only a few turn up each spring. Look at every nuthatch you hear calling, and one of them might turn out to be a brown, twisty-headed wryneck — as happened very agreeably to me one April a few years back.

April a few years back.

Last week 1 saw another of these chance arrivals, a garganey. This is a duck which appears here in small numbers in early spring, with a handful of pairs staying to breed by quiet floodwaters. This year the warm weather seems to have brought more in, but probably fewer will nest because of the drought.

The drake is unmistakable. The one I saw was standing among some reeds with only its head showing, but it was impossible to mistake the long, creamy eyestripe on the pinkish-brown head. Then it came out and dabbled on the water with some teal.

It is sometimes called a "cricket teal" but this is not because it comes here for the sport. The name represents the drake's odd spring call, which I heard my bird making several times — a kind of dry trill, or ratcheting sound, unlike anything I had heard coming from that Hertfordshire lake before.

Daily fishing, burials extra

The high cost of a traditional funeral is persuading

New Yorkers to bury their dead at sea, says Lois Letts

essica Mitford would have approved and so would Evelyn Waugh. The high cost of funerals in America, first exposed in The American Way of Death and The Loved One. is being rejected by a growing number of our transatlantic neighbours for cheaper, do-it-yourself alternatives. And among New Yorkers, burial at sea is proving popular.

In response to the demand. Long Island boatmen with gnarled hands more used to gutting fish than scattering ashes have started up lucrative sidelines in the burial business. Doug Aries, who runs Captain Doug's Burials at Sea from the Nautical Mile at Freeport, is typical of the new aquatic entrepreneur.

I started doing funerals about eight years ago, as a sideline to my fishing," he says, standing proudly next to the 72ft barnacle-encrusted Captain Doug on a windy spring day. "The first one came about by accident. A fleet of Mercedes-Benz drew up and about 20 Chinese mourners got out. They were carrying a man's ashes and asked to be taken to Far Rockaway, a local landmark, so they could scatter them. They gave the guy a traditional Oriental service on board — burning money, scattering flowers and throwing a dead chicken into the water. I charged them $500 [E330]." Emboldened by that first success, Mr Aries, 36, decided to enter the business in earnest. He now advertises in The Yellow Pages. He wears tarstained jeans and T-shirt on days when he is out fishing. but dons a suit for funerals. He loves the work: "It's serene out there, with the silent clouds, the light sand, the seagulls, the seals popping their heads out of the water. It's a real pretty environment to get buried in."

Economic necessity has driven many of his colleagues to follow him. Too many fishermen chasing too few fish in the Long Island area have led to local restrictions being placed on the catching of fluke, cod and haddock. About 20 fishing captains from the Freeport dock now offer funerals --either "full-body" immersions or the scattering of ashes — to supplement their incomes.

The Captain Doug has clean but basic facilities. Lavatories, painted a cheerful blue and pink, are marked "Buoys" and "Gulls". More upmarket is the Lady J, the gleaming white prow of which dominates the boats moored at Point Lookout, five miles from Freeport. "Burials are a sideline to my party business," says the boat's owner. Captain Pat Focazio, who performs up to 40 funerals a year. Many are in the summer but Captain Focazio will take the boat out in most weathers: "If it's too rough we'll postpone. I don't want to kill anyone."

Immigrants from all over America come to Captain Focazio to have their beloved's ashes scattered on the northeastern seaboard, close to where they first set foot in the Land of the Free. Captain Focazio is able to dominate business in the Freeport area because of his partnership with the Neptune Society (motto: Simplicity, Dignity, Economy), which has cornered the market in sea burials since the 1970s. Joan Kiernan of the New York branch of the society says it is vital to use a man who understands local weather conditions.

"If you have the wind blowing from the wrong direction and you're disseminating [dropping the ashes into the ocean, those ashes will blow straight back into the boat and all over the mourners. We like to conduct a dignified ceremony for the benefit of those who are left behind." A Neptune Society funeral service includes scattered carnations (or roses for extra) and the recitation of prayers, psalms and poems. It usually takes place after 5pm, when Captain Focazio returns from his day's the society offers its members a prepayable VIP service at $1,090 (£720) which includes removal of the body from hospital, transport to the crematorium, organising the death certificate and scattering at sea. A formal boat service costs an additional $595 (£390), but a cheaper option is to split the service with another family for $350 (£230) each. And for the bargam price of $100 (£66), Captain Focazio will scatter ashes without a service, known as "informal dissemination".

"The ashes are sent in to us," Ms Kiernan says. "We wait till we have at least ten urns. Then Captain Focazio scatters them. one after another, when he's out on the ocean." Neptune Society members appreciate the "naturalness" of an ocean scattering, and the low costs.

Full-body burials, which are less common these days, are governed by stiffer rules. Cof-fins have to be made of stainless steel and weighted

Emanuel Weintraub (right), founder of the Neptune Society, watches as a mourner scatters ashes. Sea burials cost £720 compared with about £2.650 on land down so they will sink quickly and permanently to the bottom. Captain Focazio feels a little odd performing this type of ritual: You have to go 65 miles out to 600ft of water and you feel like you're drowning someone — though once you've done a couple it gets a little easier.

Captain Mike Maresca, 76, an old-timer among the Freeport fleet, had an unfortunate experience with a full-body burial a few years back. He took out his boat, The Norseman, with a coffin and mourners for a service: "The casker arrived with holes drilled in it and weighted down so it would sink. So we had a little service and pushed the body over. But it didn't sink. It took about 15 to 20 minutes before the coffin went down. And in the meantime everyone's looking at one another and wondering what to do."

Faced with the Neptune Society's attractive rates, costs for an old-fashioned burial in a metropolitan New York cemetery are pretty steep. Rising land rates are to blame. Bonnie Tippy, director of the New York State Funeral Directors Association, reckons the average cost for traditional burial is $4,000 (£2,650). That does not include the burial space, the headstone or the gravediggers - typically sev-eral thousand dollars more.

The days of traditional funerals are, indeed, numbered according to Jack Springer, director of the Cremation Association of North America. About 22 per cent of Americans choose to be cremated, but by 2010 Mr Springer expects to see the figure rise to 40 per cent. "Cremation is less expensive, it places less pressure on the environment and it's simpler," he says. His only problem with scattering at sea is that the family has no place to return to, no real marker. Jerry Bracco, owner of Captain Ben's Fish Stock in Freeport, Long Island, thinks sea burial is a marvellous solution. His father, Captain

Benjamin Bracco, was some thing of a local legend who fished from Jones Beach and pulled in 1,800kg of flounder every day. When he died, aged 65, his wishes were to be cremated and to have his ashes sprinkled on the waves. "I think of him now swimming with the whales," says his son. "I don't have to feel guilty about visiting the graveyard or forgetting to bring him flowers. I remember him our in the ocean where he loved

In time, he would have open fires to lie by, bags of adoring, internationally accented attention and even a helipad to exercise on in the morning. A five-star dog's life he thought, as another fabulous, tummy tickle came his way.

Overnighting in the back of a chilly car while their owners enjoy themselves indoors simply isn't an acceptable option any longer. Over Christmas, the Savoy-owned Lygon Arms had 23 dog guests. "We are a smart hotel, but we are also a pub," says the managing director, Kirk Ritchie. "Dogs are an essential part of the Lygon atmosphere and we find that complaints about dogs are extremely rare."

held hands with a crusty over Easter. He even looked a bit like Swampy, the nation's new heart-throb, with his untroubled blue eyes and sweet expression. One moment I was looking at him and his friends across a crowded dance floor, thinking that actually I rather liked the way they all wore their hair in those elaborate matted pompa-dours, the dusty dreadlocks piled high. and wondering in that sort of vague midlife way you do whether I should investigate the possibility of getting some hair extensions ("I'd like a "Swampy". please 7.

The next moment, I was in a giant chain, conga-ing in and out of barns and gazing up at Hale-Bopp in a neon-free sky, with the young crusty on one side and an elderly woman in horn-rimmed spectacles and Come Dancing shoes on the other. Ah, I thought for one weak and sentimental moment, so this is what living in the country is all about.

Well, of course, it both is and is not. By which I mean that, yes, one does get the Why rural life is another country LIFE AND SOUL ferences, wherever I

But this has less to do with a deepseated sense of community than with the fact that you have less choice about whom you rub shoulders with in the country than in the city. While this may sometimes be a good thing - giving the impression that country folk are a deeply harmonious and tolerant lot, which anyone who listens to The Archers knows to be a fallacy - the thought of seeing the same assortment of people, however went would drive me round the bend. Metropolitan living. whatever its downside, does at least guarantee a certain egree of anonymity. We are, I'm embarrassed to say, in danger of turning into sad people who go to the same place for their holidays every year. For the past two or three years, at any rate, we have spent Easter in a pair of converted barns in the sort of village where the postman marries the dentist. We go with another couple from London to become a member of the squirearchy - with our garden as his domain. He insists on wearing wellingtons, even at the height of summer, to stride around inspecting the holes he has dug and what he refers to rather grandly as his worm farm". The country for him is like a wild and wonderfully expansive version of our back garden. There is a comforting uniformity to the week. Every night is a party. Every morning is a late start. We always play charades. We always visit a wonderful case over the Welsh Border which calls itself The Hat Shop. And we always ask each other, at least once, "So do you think you could ever live in the country?" It is a question that has become more pressing as the years go by - since every six months or so, friends who we had thought were irredeemable townies move out of London in search of fresh air. good schools and a rather airy fairy notion of the pastoral idyll. This exodus, it seems to me, is tinged with a Proustian longing to recapture the golden lost moments of their own childhood. My best friend has moved back to the village she grew up in. Another girlfriend fantasises from her South London Vic-torian terrace about becoming the heroine of My Little Pony, with a dash of Jilly Cooper sex 'n' dressage.

My answer to the question, however, remains a hearifelt "No". Cottages make me feel claustrophobic. I am quite impervious to the charms of the Aga. And I have no desire to spend my days as a taxi driver, ferrying my children huge distances hither and thither across the countryside. And while one can begin to see the point of the country in the summer months, a wintry English landscape is more depressing than a Bergman film. On balance, I think I'd rather slash my wrists in the city.

Not under our roof you won't

should sleep with their lover in your house

here was one job we did almost as soon as we moved into our last house, where a country solicitor and his wife had brought up three children. It was to paint the attic bedroom where "Always Use a Condom had been written in large letters over the bed.

The couple showing us round never mentioned it. They were apologetic about the vast drawing room, made shabby by their son's impromptu rugby games, but the scrums in the attic obviously didn't worry them at all. The words on the wall could mean only one thing. Their children had been allowed to sleep with their partners under their parents' roof. For this family it was no big deal. Others find it more of a problem.

A couple of years ago, when she was 16. Louisa Kershaw asked her mother how she would feel about her sleeping with a boyfriend at home. "She said it would be fine by her as long as I was responsible surprised, but I was glad. It meant she trusted me," says Louisa, who is now reading biomedical sciences at university. "Most of my friends have parents saying 'not under our roof. Some of them go and do

Although she has had serious relationships, Louisa hasn't yet taken her mother up on the offer of bed and breakfast for two at their home in Scotland. "I'm not sure when I will," she laughs, "but it's good to know I have the chance." Her mother Kathy, who applied the same rule to Louisa's two older brothers. believes young people need safety and choice in sexual matters. "Letting her know that it would be fine by me if she brought someone home is my way of helping with that. I would like her to be doing what she feels she needs to be doing without peer pressure or parental pressure. I really value being able to talk to my children and to have a more open relationship than I had with my parents. Some people may see it as encouraging her to become promiscuous, but if anything openness encourages young people to explore feelings and relationships without rushing in." Miss Kershaw is a free-lance "group facilitator" running personal development courses for groups such as the Workers' Educational Association. She is also the Highlands co-ordinator for Parent Network, which holds parenting courses nationwide. Sex "under our roof" is just the sort of topic which comes up.

The topic came up for John and his wife Claire, who both teach in a Dorset secondary school. They have four children, boys and girls aged between 20 and eight. They also have a united front against sex at home. "We have more or less said no from the beginning and they have accepted it very well. It wasn't something we planned. Cir-cumstances almost overwhelm you and you find you have to make a decision," John says.

"It's very much something to do with the younger ones. Sex is something you want them to grow up into and not be forced to confront too early. If they see a standard being set further up the line, they soon think 'It's my turn now'. And that's bad for them. "The argument that home is the safest place never concerned us at all. They were mobile, and there were places they could go. They could always find an opportunity elsewhere." The couple have a friend who takes morning tea in bed to her sons and their girlfriends.

Alison Hadley, of the Brook Advisory Service, which offers contraception and sexual counselling for young people, says that parents have to realise that saying no to sex in the house simply means it will happen somewhere else. "It's fine to have your own rules, as long as you have thought about the consequences. If you say yes because you'd rather they had a decent environment rather than a car or a park, you might also say one day a week' or 'at the weekend' or 'not while it might interfere with your schoolwork'.

"If you say no, you have to realise that they may go some-where less conducive to a good and safe sexual relationship. Those who say no sometimes simply don't want to know their children are having sex. Some say no and insist on separate rooms, but expect it to Gael Lindenfield remembers how saying yes to her daughter changed the mother-child relationship. She is a psychotherapist and author of Confident Children (Thorsons, £5,99). "It was a mile-stone. I knew they were sleeping together and I said: You know, you can bring James home and you can sleep here together if you want to.'

Our whole relationship

Louisa Kershaw, right, with her mother Kathy: "She said I could sleep with my boyfriend at home as long as I behaved responsibly" changed. And that's something people can be frightened of. It moves things to an adultto-adult footing. And a young person bringing a partner home is often signalling that their relationship has become a serious commitment.

he says: "Like a lot of teenage problems, sex at home really shows up the cracks in a family not used to being upfront and coping with dilemmas. Sometimes saying no is a matter of power. Sometimes it's a matter of what the neighbours will think. There must be more of this now because children are living at home with their parents for longer, because they can't afford to move into a place of their own."

Sian and Roger, parents of two teenage girls, are prepared to say yes to their elder daughter, who is 17. She hasn't actually asked yet." Sian says. "And I'm not sure if it's ever happened under our roof. To say no would be to admit to having a bit of a hang-up about sex myself. I think. At the same time, her bedroom is directly over ours and I wouldn't want to hear them at it."

Roger, an engineer. knows it's okay by him. because he

He spotted her in the early hours of the morning partly-clothed and asleep on the sofa with what seemed to be the shorthaired female friend she'd gone out with that evening. ## Jolly japes with the Archbishop

THE CLOWN, a red-faced priest called Roly, was doing a thing of which I could only dream. With a feather duster and a shocking Shakespearean licence, he polished the Archbishop of Canterbury's shining pate with an energy that must have left the few hairs remaining there thoroughly vanquished.

Along with the thousand-plus children present, we watched Dr George Carey closely for any sign of godly, archiespiscopal wrath. There was none. And it could have been my imagination, but as the spring sunshine filtered through the diamond lights of Salisbury cathedral, a faint halo appeared instead, reflected from the gleam.

Or Carey was nearing the end of a three-day flying visit to the Salisbury diocese. Hopping in and out of a helicopter, he preached in the cathedral, in Bradford-on-Avon and in Poole. He was interviewed by young people in an event billed as "Dr Carey Unplugged at Poole arts centre and lunched with parishioners in rural Wiltshire and Dorset. We caught up with him at a service for schools in the cathedral, where the contrast between this and my last occasion there, for a candlelit mass attended by numerous bishops and dignitaries and with the choir robed in all its splendour, could not have been greater.

Children were everywhere. They sat in corners, beside tombs, on flagstones and stone benches, around the purbeck marble columns. Anyone in a mitre was mobbed by infants demanding autographs. Rising from their midst was the Archbishop. seated on a temporary throne on a platform in the centre of the nave. Children from Dorset's Emmanuel school performed a dance, robed as yellow and orange pentecostal flames. A hushed silence descended before wild applause, and then it was time for the Archbishop to be "hotseated". Television producer Joe Fisher ran from one end of the nave to the other with a microphone, inviting the infants to challenge Dr Carey. Roly, one of the church's devout band of "Holy Fools", qualified clowns who are also ordained, ran around cracking jokes and making trouble.

First into the fray was blonde, angelic Kimberley: "How did you get to be Archbishop and did you have any doubts about accepting?" she asked. "I got a letter from the Prime Minister," he said, in the same tone of voice that I use when reporting receipt of my Visa bill to my husband. "I was Bishop of Bath and Wells at the time," he added, by way of explanation. And yes, he did have doubts, but took the job because he had never run away from a challenge.

Melissa asked the most intelligent question: "Are you going to change anything about the church to make it more interesting?" Yes. he said, but she and all young people must help him work out how. A boy called Andrew asked him what his family thought about his promotion. "I don't know about my wife but some members of my family were quite worried about it," he confessed.

Peter asked him what he liked best about his job, to which for some reason he said: "My favourite team is Arsenal." This was a hugely popular or unpopular response, depending on which end of the nave you happened to be seated at. Terrace-style chaos threatened, and something that sounded like a football chant but Salisbury. Wilts SP1 2EF (07722 328726).

"oink", they say "noff noff": and Swedish ducks go "kvak", the horses say "gneg" and the dogs do a "voof". It is important to know this if you take your children for a summer holiday on a Swedish farm, because it is not long before all that sunshine, fresh air and awesomely orderly countryside inspire a family chorus of Old Macdonald had a Farm. I mean, of course, Per Olsson's bonnagard.

The tune is the same, but who would know that the Swedish for ee-i-ee-i-o is ianhan-lej? It required some patient instruction from Ludwig, the seven-year-old son of the farmer we stayed with near Helsingborg, before I heard my children merrily singing, "de va noff noff har. de va noff noff dar" in the back seat of our car.

Nursery rhymes are not the only thing we have in common with the Swedes. Most of us assume they live in a healthy, pine-scented paradise where everyone lies on duvets dreaming up clever-clogs furniture and designer vodkas. Listen to a Swedish farmer's wife moaning about the price of pigs over her kitchen table. though, and you wonder who switched on The Archers.

e make only £4 from a pig now that Sweden has joined the complained Ludwig's mum, Maria Hofvendal. We knew this was serious because 1,000 of those pigs were noffnoffing away in a nearby shed. In a sense, our holidaying here was saving their bacon, because for the past three years Maria and hes husband Peter have been offering Rum & Frukost (bed and breakfast) on their farm to raise some extra cash. They belong to a nationwide scheme known as Bo pa Lantgard (Stay on a Farm), which offers accommodation on 140 farms from

Malmö to the Arctic Circle. The greatest concentration of R&F farms is in Skane. Sweden's southernmost county. This is the country's breadbasket, a prosperous land of undulating agricultural plains, neat market towns and spotless sandy beaches. Most arms are within a three-hour drive from the ferry port of Gothenburg, and they differ onsiderably. We stayed on two farms during our week's package, starting with Marielund. belonging to Maria and Peter, on Skåne's west coast. Built in 1892, this was hardly a farmhouse, more a grand manorial powerbase with a steepled clock tower and Renaissance façade that reflected the wealth Peter's forefathers enjoyed before the farm shrunk to its present 500 acres. My wife and I were billeted in a splendid octagonal bedroom with a white-tiled stove and heirloom furnishings, while Staffan Ostlind, had us inspecting some two-day-old piglets, feeding the hens and commiserating with a lame lamb on the lawn. The farm exemplified the legendary in-dustriousness of the Swedish homesteader. Besides 40 pigs, 25 ewes, a soppy dog and 12 acres of apple orchards, Stellan and his wife Cecilia had adopted four Brazilian children, aged 11 to 16. "And I'm looking for a job." # Noah would like this

t was as if Noah had just emptied his ark after the flood. James, our naturalist and driver, had stopped on a slope above a waterhole in Kenya's Tsavo National Park. My husband and I and our sons, aged eight and six, got out, established our positions, adjusted our binoculars and waited.

A small flock of white pelicans with big yellow beaks arrived first. Many more followed, flying in formation against the ripening sunset. A hippopotamus came up for air to inspect them and a solitary stork watched, stony still, from the bank.

Then zebras came in families to stroll beside the water, their sharp stripes making surprisingly effective camouflage. Waterbuck arrived to sip among the Egyptian geese. A group of water buffalo kept themselves to thenselves.

Further off, a herd of impala moved into view, but kept their nervous distance. Then, slowly and majestically, the elephants began to arrive, in extended families with the young suckling their mothers, and in great lines striding like soldiers across the scrub.

Elephants of all sizes

arrived, family after family wading into the water to cool off. All was idyllic when, suddenly, two great tuskers broke into a fight. Locking tusks and crashing heads, they became a confusion of legs. flapping ears, terrific noise and clouds of red dust.

It was a spectacular introduction to the wildlife of Kenya, its apparent calm and its raw energy.

Over the next two days we moved through a gazetteer of animals and birds. We watched a lioness training her cubs, leopards unsuccessfully stalking some zebra, ridiculously ungainly ostriches prancing through their mating dances, hideous warthogs scuttling along with tails up like periscopes, mongooses feasting at a giant termite nest. We had the safari van to ourselves and only saw other people at a distance.

Morning and evening we explored the park from our base, Satao Camp. Satao Camp has a few modern luxuries, but not too many. The large tents have adjoining wooden bathrooms, where a leather sack suspended from the ceiling provides hot showers to wash off the Tsavo dust.

At night, we could sit outside sipping our South African wine and watching the wildlife 100 yards away knowing that askaris (riight watchmen) were on the alert.

One night, to our sons' delight, they had to fire their guns to scare off a lioness coming in search of her two curious cubs who had been attracted by the camp lights.

Satao was our extravagant three-day jaunt during a fort-night of cosseted sumptuousness beside the Indian Ocean. We had flown from Gatwick into tropical Mombasa.

Driving from Moi Airport past coconut palms and trees glowing with large yellow and word pectures orange flowers, we glimpsed the city and its hotchpotch life: a tailor working at a treadle sewing machine, cows wardering the streets, English road signs, an Indian-run bookstore, an advertisement for "slapping good shoes", a bright yellow temple, a green mosque, a noisy Hard Rock Café and a kanga-wrapped woman carrying a laden basket on her head.

he cashew nut dispensary and the basket shop were tempting, as were the piles of mangoes and papayas, but we pressed on. Across the ferry crowded with lace-capped Muslims on their way to work, the road south took us to Diani Beach and the Indian Ocean Beach Club.

Beach Club.

This casis of elegance was designed by Nairobi architects and immaculately managed by (the mainly British) Block hotels. Two-storey cottages in thatched Swahili or whitewashed coastal Islamic styles are scattered through acres of lush garden. punctuated by mature baobab trees and cascades of bougainvillea.

Our first-floor rooms had big balconies, planters' chairs and four-poster beds draped with mosquito nets. From here, we would spot dhows and ships plying the Indian Ocean, which glistened in the fresh post-monsoon sunshine. The occasional tail-end monsoon shower not only refreshed the air but kept the temperatures comfortable. Later in the year, apparently, solid blue skies would bring blistering heat and a dust-

Life was an indulgent amble through each lazy day. While we did nothing much, our two sons burnt up energy in the pool, at sessions of beach volleyball and at the impressive evening entertainment.

n the beach we collected shells, swam in warm lagoons, jumped surf waves (leaving others to tackle the strong undertow current), built complex sandcastles and borrowed a hotel pedalo to go out to the reef to peer at Kenya's rich underwater life.

Our sunset walks to spot grey herons, egrets and monkeys at the river estuary became a daily ritual. Contrary to dire warnings in Britain, we did not tear our feet on the coral-ridden sands. Neither did we get sunstroke: the July sunshine was not powerful enough. Aggressive hawkers certainly existed down the beach in front of other hotels, but our small bunch were harmless. When young Oliver asked one if he was a pirate, he replied he was "beach businessman" and they became firm friends. However, newspaper stories regular shootings and knifings in Mombasa deterred us from making bus trips to

One day, we went inland to overnight at Shimba Hills Lodge, a huge treehouse in the forest. Another, we travelled south through a rural land-scape of paddy fields and cashew nut trees, blossoming flame trees and roadside mosques and cafes. We lunched on Wasini Island, gorging ourselves on giant crabs, and then spent tiny sums on finely carved wooden spoons, baskets and vibrantly coloured kangas.

Perhaps we chose our hotel and our safari well; both were ideal for a family holiday, even if we barely touched the raw energy of the country. When I asked Renata, our agent, about other hotels south of Mombasa she replied: "You don't even have to peek. There's no competition."

mecca had become a parody of its former, frontier self; minibuses crowding in unseemly scrums around sightings of Africa's Big Five" — and little else — before decanting their passengers at 300-bed lodges. Africa Kenya-style was about overcrowded parks and reserves, and accommodation with all the atmosphere of airport hotels.

Even today, just seven of the country's 59 parks account for 98 per cent of her tourists. Recently, however, a new dawn for tourism seems finally to be breaking over Africa's most scenically varied country. Kenya's extraordinary array of habitats includes the Aberdare mountains, the savannah grasslands of the Masai Mara-wetland areas such as Nakuru, classic woodlands and plains areas like Samburu and Meru, tropical rainforest at Kakamega, as well as deserts and marine reserves.

Accommodation options are increasingly popular. Remote, smallscale tented camps hark back to the bush safari experiences of an earlier age. Cattle ranches, once home to pioneer settlers, are taking in guests, particularly on the Laikipia plateau. The Kenya Wildlife Service (KWS), which spent much of the 1980s tackling poachers, is now working imaginatively with local communities to establish tourism concerns on tribal lands.

David Western, director of the KWS, said: Some 75 per cent of Kenya's wildlife live outside the parks. Creating parks beyond parks provides the people with an income alternative to cattle or arable farming, which only intensify pressure on habitat and water

KWS warden Danny Woodley flew me from Nairobi south to Amboseli National Park, where the water run-off from Mount Kilimaniaro straddling the Tanzanian border provides a swamp area that attracts spectacular wildlife, not least the park's farned elephants. Mr Woodkey said: "In the 1980s the Masai were threatening to kill the park's last remaining rhinos if their land rights were not recognised. Now, they are being encouraged to establish their own tourism concerns beyond the park boundaries." Tortilis Camp, built on leased Masai land by safari operator Cheli & Peacock's Stefano Cheli, the staff and almost all local people are encouraged to appreciate their own

The C&P camp had been pitched among untouched bush on tribal lands beyond the reserve boundaries. Here, park laws forbidding bush walking, night game drives and even game viewing from the roof of the vehicles did not apply. Distant Masai tribesmen, banned from grazing their cattle within the parks, often appeared on our game drives, their traditional red tartan wraps giving them spectacular prominence on landscapes in which all other life forms had evolved to merge. Their presence contributed to a truer African picture. These people have been part of the savannah scene for hundreds of years. Their traditional burning of the long grass is actually considered to attract game.

We are under the stars while animal eyes danced beyond the campfire. Our tents were furnished with cast-iron beds, the freshest starched sheets and hurricane lamps. Masai tribesmen, armed with spears, stood guard over the camp by night while leopards uttered their strange sawing calls. One afternoon after tea - a

Through an interpreter, the village elder explained that the income salari operators pay the community to camp on their land was encouraging them to look after the wildlife - their new meal ricket. Once, it was a sign of bravery to kill lions. Now, it is stupidity," he explained. David Western calls this process "winning back space" for the wildlife. We want the local people to regard the wildlife on their land as an asset, not as a liability," he said. It proved a heartening visit.

Just what was at stake was all too apparent from the air as Cheli flew me north from the Masai Mara where savannah abruptly gave way to wheat fields. "If we don't make tourism pay, the Masai are sure to lease their land for wheat production," he explained. "The wildlife will be driven out."

unghai, our driver, Not once did he misidentify a bird out of a possible 800 species. In terms of numbers the rainforest may have avian superiority, but East Africa's ornithology is more accessible and conspicuous. It is a wonder of the world. He would stop the 4x4 safari car and hand us the book so we could see for ourselves his infallible selection from page after page of sunbirds, weavers, bustards, longclaws and babblers. Then he would reverently repeat the name, as if savouring a linguistic delica-cy: "Rufous-naped lark. Emerald-spotted wood dove." No nuance of colour or feather escaped him. "No, not the fiscal shrike," he politely corrected us. "The taita fiscal." So when he pronounced on the grey bulk slumped under an acacia half a mile away on the horizon - to our untutored eyes no more than a boulder -he was presenting not a hunch but a triumphant certainty: Lewa Downs's greatest prize.

Munghai started the engine and we set off uphill, pitching and joiting at less than walking pace on a track scoured to the rock by the rain, diverting around a roadblock of branches recently amoutated by elephants. Then we reached the place. Before us was the tragic, prehistoric sensation of Africa. Not one, but five drowsy white rhinos, squeezed into every spare square inch of shade, as if the sun was their only problem. To the poacher, their horns represent the most valuable animal product on earth. About £200,000 worth lay cushioned on the red earth. If the white rhino is almost suicidally submissive, the black is three tonnes of blundering edginess, an indiscriminate menace to friend and poacher alike. Next morning we watched in awestruck silence from about 200 yards as one strained beyond its fog of short-sightedness to pick up the rumour of intrusion from our direction. Only the previous week a black rhino had dispatched a squad of visiting camels for two miles. While elsewhere on the continent the last few hundred rhinos blunder myopically towards extinction, on this private conservancy they are Fort Knox-secure inside a 70-mile long, solar-powered electric fence, patrolled by more than 100 armed guards, proud men from the local tribes in green of a tree, then chased their

If the guards were stood down and the fence deactivated, the rhinos would be dead within days. Conservation at Lewa Downs is not for the faint-hearted.

Tifteen miles north of the Equator, 5,500ft up on the northern foothills of snow-capped Mount Kenya, Lewa Downs is 55,000 acres of majestic African views scattered with acacias and rugged prominences, riddled steep valleys, swamps and rivers. This land was first farmed in the 1920s by the Craig family, who even then had a conservationist vision. The second-generation Craigs initiated the switch from cattle to wildlife, which was allowed to find its way back into their benign estate.

The third generation of Craigs, William and Emma, working with a trust which administers Lewa as a nature conservancy, is completing the transition to a final balance of 85 per cent game to 15 per cent cattle. During our visit. black and white rhino numbers were equal after some recent births, 44 in total.

Lewa's other specialities are some of Africa's biggest herds of reticulated giraffe and Grevy's zebra. It recently reintroduced the rare sitatunga. Otherwise it admits anything that wants to enter through a 30-yard gap in the fence. Animals are free to leave (Lewa is not a zoo) - all except the rhino which, with its short legs, cannot step over a low wall in the fence gap.

Lewa is persuasive proof of the new and optimistic proposition in Africa that wildlife is worth more alive than dead. and that an entire local economy can be sustained by ecotourism. Several hundred local people now work there.

The Craigs treat the salari experience as if it were a limited edition. In many of the East African national parks congestion is becoming a serious problem. Visitors may have to join a scrum of as many as 30 vehicles to view a pride of lions. Here only 60 tourists are admitted at any

output could prepare us for the elemental thrill of our first game drive. Here was nature in primeval abundance, spaced out as if by some invisible demarcation. To adult eyes that had previously seen just one eagle, briefly, distantly. western Scotland, here was a double-layer chocolate box of them, with the bateleur – broad white breast – demanding to be picked first. We had never seen a goshawk. Lewa has four species. Our first was a passage of epic poetry on wings, the pale-chanting goshawk.

A single tree illustrated the tabulous carrying capacity of the African eco-system. In one small acacia the only two perching places were taken by the assassin and the harlequin. The continent's smallest bird of prey, the pygmy falcon. sat alongside the scarletbreasted roller, sumptiously quartered in red and green and blue and lilac. Lewa has the complete feline complement, including nomadic lions, deep in the ample cover and rarely seen. In the end we saw but a solitary cat. but it was worth a dozen encounters with a comatose pride out on the hot plains, corralled by tourist vehicles. The brief, copper dusk had plummeted into deep night in minutes. Munghai, one hand on the wheel, a flashlight in the other, was sweeping the river edge. Animals twinkled back ocular acknowledgement. Red/brown meant bush baby; blue/green was water buck. But Munghai had a hunch. He stopped, reversed and teased the undergrowth. With his flashlight he conjured a mottled form out of the black. Briefly, he exposed a solitary hunter, pure blue for leopard. We sampled two forms of accommodation at Lewa. The tented camp, encapsulating the practised comforts familiar to two centuries of British officers under canvas, was in effect a five-star hotel trundled round the game reserves on the back of a truck, with an attendant per tent - two when it came to filling up the gravity shower with water heated on a wood fire.

We also stayed in one of the six stone cottages in the gardens of the Craigs' home. The days were a succession of colonial indulgences. They began with a pre-dawn flask of tea on our verandah and ended, after an excellent meal from Michael, the visiting Irish chef hired from a London restaurant to refresh the catering, with drinks on the Craigs' balcony, where we would listen for the roar of lions in the valley below.

One morning Mr Craig was our pilot in his restored biplane on a circuit of the estate. as the sun rose over Mount Kenya. The next he was our host for a breakfast on the olains under an acacia, after a horse ride among the giraffe.

For one memorable afternoon walk we were led out by a immaculate young Masai, hair plaited, dressed in a shift of startling scarlet and carrying a spear. Not some tourist gimmick, but a trainee guide on work experience.

Lewa wants to replicate its model of eco-tourism in the Masai's own reserves nearby. If the tribes can make an income from the wildlife around them, they, better than anyone, will be able to conserve it. There is hope for Africa's wildlife.

The Americas: Graceland prepares for the 20th anniversary of Elvis's death; the Mexicans drink to their saints

The king is dead, long live the king

t will be proof of Elvis Presley's enduring ap-peal. An expected 50,000 fans, including 1,200 from Britain, will gather outside Graceland, his home in Memphis, at dusk on Friday, August 15 to mark the 20th anniversary of his death.

A section of Elvis Presley Boulevard will be closed to traffic as the gates open. Fans will walk up the drive, each carrying a lighted candle. They will file past his grave and walk back down. The vigil will continue until dawn. Judging by past performances, many will be in tears.

This tribute to the king of rock'n'roll has grown into a string of commemorative events that will be bigger than ever this year. The week opens with a banquet for leaders of 370 Elvis fan clubs around the world and ends with a concert that will see him reunited in performance, thanks to video technology, with his backup singers and musicians. Seminars on the Elvis cult and its semi-religious overtones will be held by academics who, fending off criticism, insist that his significance is worthy of serious study.

Death Week gets booked up early but walking in the footsteps of Elvis is now a year-round tourist attraction. The Elvis trail begins 90 miles south of Memphis in Tupelo. Mississippi, at the two-room shack where he was born into poverty and lived until he was 13. It was built by his father, uncle and grandfather, all farm workers, and had no electricity or plumbing. The home is open to the public, along with a small museum and memorial chapel.

Next stop on the trail is Holly Springs, halfway between Tupelo and Memphis. to visit Paul MacLeod, the world's biggest Elvis fan, and his son, Elvis Aaron Presley MacLeod. Both look and dress like Elvis. Their lives are devoted to compiling Elvis memorabilia. Their home, Graceland Too, is a sagging mini-clone of the original and a unique Elvis shrine.

Then there are the funky clubs along Beale Street in Memphis where the teenage Elvis, a truck driver by day, soaked up the blues by night. Well worth visiting is Sun records and where the owner Sam Phillips, realised he had found a white boy who could sing black rhythm and blues.

An airbrushed Elvis is presented at Graceland, now owned by his daughter. Lisa Marie. There is no talk here of the eating binges that helped to kill him at 42, nor any mention of Ginger Alden, his 21-year-old fiancée who found his bloated body slumped in the lavatory. Only the briefest reference is made to his dependence on drugs and none to the shambles his life became.

Rather, he is portrayed as a family man who could hardly wait to get home from work. Yes, there was the time he shot out the screen of a television set, one of 14 in the house, but, hey, what's a little high-spirited target practice for the king?

Graceland runs second only to the White House as the bestknown home in America. Some 750,000 make the pilgrimage annually. It is prudent to go as early as 8am in summer, before the humidity kicks in. The Southern mansion, with its imposing columns and portico, is surprisingly small inside. Beyond the front door lies a time warp of decor, furnishings and kitsch. unchanged since the Sixties

Moonshine with the Mayans in Mexico

n the past two years, the Mexican province of Chiaconflict. But now hostilities seem to be over and this beautiful, lushly forested region is welcoming tourists again.

The provincial capital, Tuxtia Gutierrez, is a large, unlovely town in the humid lowlands of northern Chiapas and has the only airport for miles around. Head straight out of the place and take to the hills — and San Cristobal perhaps stopping to visit the spectacular Canon del Sumidero, en route.

This magnificent, kilometredeep carryon conveys the Rio Grijalva on its way to the Pacific, and is so big it has its own microclimate. Boats for viewing Sumidero's mists and heat-hazes can be hired at the pier in Chiapas del Corzo. The trip is certainly worth the £3-£4. Vultures wheel against a cloudless blue sky, herons nest in crags halfway up the un-dimbable walls. Crocodiles are rumoured to lurk beneath the waters.

A day spent in the canyon means a late afternoon journey into the remote, mysterious uplands of central Chiapas. It is a beautiful trip. Suddenly the foothills rear out of the arid Mexican plain, higher and higher into the verdant forests:

Our bus (the best and cheapest way of getting round Mexico) was one of those where the driver is a Zen Master of Taking Corners Too Fast: but the scenery was too eagles from the town square. The lack of tourists is agreeable and the by-product cheapness means that you can get a good hotel room for £5, a beer for 30p, and a huge meal for £2.50 — tacos, beans and enchiladas

feast of their patron saint, the "church" full of worshippers in sheepskins wafts incense

over waxwork saints. Outside the church the noise of the fireworks and skirl of the accordion music became deafening. Eventually, we found a quieter spot - a clearing surrounded by mud huts. In one of the huts we discovered we could buy a bottle of posh.

Carefully, the bar owner poured the clear liquor out of a petrol can and sold the bottle to us for just 10p, a price which should have acted as a warning. But we guzzled it all the same and after an hour were singing a selection of songs from Oliver! Two hours later we blacked out.

For a glimpse of the Mayan empire in its antique splendour you have to take a bus out of San Cristobal, through the mountains, past the great Lacandon rainforest, down to the lost city of Palenque.

Palenque means palisade in Spanish but this place is more than a defensive fortification. It is a 1,000-year-old complex of grey stone castles and temples dedicated to Chac, the man-eating rain god. If you are lucky you might catch a glimpse of the quetzal bird, whose exquisite tur-quoise feathers were once dispatched by the Conquistador Hernan Cortés, as an example of the New World's beauty, to a delighted King of t struck me, as i strolled the sunny promenade deck of the Oriana taking the Mediterranean air, with the tawny haze of north Africa on the starboard beam, that in the days I had been aboard I had not sighted a single pair of jeans.

Daytime lashion aboard was decidedly Middle Eng-land — casual but smart. It was all of a piece with the distinctive and comfortable ambience of the ship, with the polished wood and brasswork, with service that was attentive and dignified without being

The strong sense of Britain afloat was underlined by the voices. In the bars and on the decks, in the three swimming pools and five jacuzzis, I heard the cadences of Plymouth. Bristol, Birmingham, Cardiff, Belfast, Leeds, Edinburgh, London and Liverpool.

Ninety-five per cent of the 1,700 passengers ordered morning tea (on P&O's American ships the same percentage order coffee) and most kicked off the day with the full English breakfast - complete, of course, with sausages and mushrooms. Muesli was well down in the popularity stakes. A chap at my table said stoutly: My test of a good breakfast is how the porridge is cooked and I have to say," as he spooned another mouthful - "it's pretty good." On the matter of food, Captain Colin Campbell said emphatically: "On this ship, dinner counts." It seemed that breakfast, lunch and afternoon tea counted, too, but there was no doubt that the five-course dinner was the pinnacle of the day. It was always an occasion, as if at a King's command, with the flagship courses tailored to mainstream British tastes: roast lamb, duck and turkey. roast beef and Yorkshire pud ding and a most noble Beef Wellington. More than a few men, anticipating the splendours of the table, had sensibly kitted themselves with those excellent elastic-waistband trousers which are so good for morale.

We boarded the Oriana at Southampton. The procedures were swift and painless and we found ourselves in the heart of the big ship, the four-deck arrium with its stunning 50ft waterfall. On deck, we leaned over the rail and watched as we were compahed off by the red-coated band of the Royal Gloucester. Berkshire and Wiltshire Regiment. As a first-time cruiser I wondered why such a crowd of people flocked to the library. It was a spectacle to lift any author's heart. I was told: "The old cruising hands get in quickly for the pick of the book crop."

We explored the nine bars and decided that the Lord's Tavern would be our local. Most of them were from Goa and southern India, in keeping with a 150-year P&O tradition. and some of them were following in their fathers' and grandfathers' footsteps. The wine list was excellent and none of the prices caused a wince. A couple at our table were delighted with the night nursery caring for their young children, enabling them to dine in peace. Bliss. sunshine cruise. We settled into a routine of pre-breakfast walks along the wraparound promenade deck - the boulevard of teak - followed by swimming, reading, lunching, swimming, reading and afternoon tea.

This exacting regime left no time for deck quoits, tennis, cricket, the golf range and scuba lessons. We sometimes had buffet lunch in the conservatory and contemplated the ship's wake unfurling over the blue Med. At sunset every day we went for a session in the capacious and splendid sauna. I have to confess that we did not use the glearningly impressive gymnasium but only watched in awe as people raised weights, stretched, ran and pedalled away on the exercise cycles as if, through a complicated chain drive, they were pedalling the mighty Oriana at a steady 21 knots. After dinner we were drawn

An expedition cruise is not like that. Expedition cruises go off the too-well-beaten track and if the itinerary has to be changed, no one minds. Take, for example, the Caledonian Star. The CalStar, as she is known to her countless devotees, is a converted trawler. She is very comfortable indeed but carries only 100 passengers and cruises to the more remote corners of the world. the Galapagos, the islands of Indonesia, the South Seas.

From the Calstar the pas sengers, who tend to be older and fairly well off, sally ashore in rubber Zodiac dinghies to snorkel off remote beaches, visit historic sites, or go into the bush for a guided walk or some birdwatching. That done, it is back on board for splendid meals, interesting lectures and good company.

We picked up the Caledonian Star at Madan, a port on the north coast of Sumatra, and sailed for the island of Palau Weh. Palau Weh has a great deal of jungle, spice groves and coconut palms and hardly any people, so we had a pleasant day there before upping anchor and sailing that night for Banda Aceh. Banda Aceh is known in Sumatra as the Doorway to Mecca, a Muslim pilgrim port since the Middle Ages. Passenger ships and dhows cram the harbour but we arrived on a Friday so most of the attractions were closed. However, there was a good museum and a great bronze bell presented to the local Sultan by the Emperor of China.

Then we got back on the CalStar and set out on the four-day voyage to Sri Lanka.

My ideal day afloat was spent reading on a lounger by the pool, but some people like to keep busy. There was snor-kelling and aerobics, painting classes and lectures on wildlife and Indian Ocean history.

And so to Sri Lanka. Our entry port was the old Dutch harbour and fortress of Galle, pronounced "Gaul", on the southern tip of the island. Galle is a pretty place, with splendid fortifications, a harbour with brightly-painted fishing boats and the New Oriental Hotel, a quaint, colonial-style place, with barefoot waiters and circling fans.

It was all very pleasant but we had been promised elephants so there was considerable anticipation as we sailed that night for Colombo. Colombo did not detain us long. We crept in with the dawn. disembarked after breakfast and hacked our way through the rush hour onto the road for Kandy, a splendid route, offering magnificent views as it climbs into the mountains, clouds of fruit-bats and, at last, elephants of every size. Each village between Colombo and Kandy specializes in some form of craft or commodity, so we passed villages devoted to pottery or cane furniture, or pineapples. Young girls in bright saris swarmed onto the bus and sold us a considerable quantity of cashew nuts. These went down very well when we reached the Elephant Orphanage at Pinnawela. Sri Lanka is full of elephants and those which fall on hard times, lose their mothers, grow old, or fall into traps, usually end up at Pinnawela. There were about 60 of them splashing about in the river, from a hairy baby three months old to a blind old tusker that had been caught terrorising villages and brought here for his own good.

I could have stayed there all day, but we had to get on to Kandy, a pleasant hill town, once a holiday resort for tea planters, now better known for its botanical gardens and the Temple of the Buddha's Tooth. There is also a lake to stroll around but the CalStar was calling and we had to get back.

nother day at sea took us to the Maldives, that magical litter of islands, more than 2,000 in all like jewels in an aquamarine sea. We saw a whale and dolphins and, having anchored inside the reef, went ashore in the Zodiacs for a spot of snorkelling, viewing tropi-cal fish and the occasional questing shark.

Here I got off, taking the helicopter to Soneva Fushi, one of the finest of the resort islands, for a weekend ashore before the flight home. As we flew out two days later we could see the CalStar far below, heading for the Sey-chelles, Aldabra and the African coast, taking her passengers to other places and further adventures. I wish I had been on board.

BUCHEPHALUS (b) The name of Alexander the Great's famous charger. From the Greek for "ox-head". Hence. applied humorously as the name for any riding-horse, particularly not a very good one.

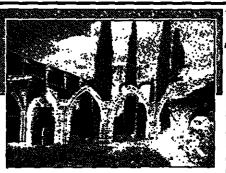

THE EASTERN MEDITERRANEAN'S BEST KEPT SECRET

7 Nights from £375 Torthern Cyprus is one of the Mediterranean's hidden gems. Little known and relatively untouched by tourism you will not find it offered in the pages of the major tour operators brochures. Consequently, the visitor numbers are low in comparison to other Mediterranean destinations and the atmosphere is similar to that experienced some 30 years ago in European resorts before the advent of the 'package tour'.

Northern Cyprus offers the traveller everything that is required for a peaceful, relaxing and stress-free break. The scenery is nothing short of magnificent, the history fascinating, the people welcoming, the food excellent and the weather all you would expect from an Eastern Mediterranean location.

Our base is the Onar Village and Hotel which is located in the hills behind the enchanting resort of Kyrenia. In our opinion it is quite the nicest of hotels in Northern Cyprus. You have the choice of large one-bedroomed garden cottages or hotel rooms with balcony. Facilities include a large swimming pool, restaurant, bar, library, games room, craft shop and courtesy car service into

During the months of June, July and August we offer high summer 7 or 14 night breaks from as little as £419 per person. In Autumn and Spring our 7 night Kyrenia and Beyond tour or Walking tour provides a comprehensive look at the country from £749 per person. # Britain: Seeking an answer to the reason for Wiltshire's white horses is an ideal theme for a touring break here is something mystical and even magical about the hill figures of England.

Mystery of the magnificent seven

Carved into the underlying chalk, there they stand, ancient and modern, realistic or symbolic, staring out across the countryside, stirring the imagination, arousing curiosity and signifying ... what? That unanswered question is part of the attraction. The Long Man of Wilmington on the South Downs in East Sussex and the Corfe Giant in Dorset are probably fertility symbols, but what possessed people to carve out the great White Horse at Uffington or the other six white horses that adorn the smooth hillsides of Wiltshire?

The answers vary but the attraction remains. Because all these horses lie within easy reach of the market town of Marlborough, they provide the perfect theme for a car tour or a weekend break, the ideal downland country.

Marlborough used to be a stop on the turnpike road between London and Bath. The Castle and Ball hotel in the High Street, which is the widest high street in Britain, is within easy walking distance of the first white horse, which lies on the hill above Marlborough College.

THE STRENGTH of sterling against the franc is reflected in a 41 per cent rise in the number of ferry passengers travelling through Dover in the first quarter of 1997. More than 3.9 million used the port. with car numbers up by 34 per cent, coaches 28 per cent.

Some of the growth is attributed to the Channel Tunnel fire in November, which has seen passengers switch to the ferries. But March figures show that, despite only operat-ing at half-capacity, Le Shuttle has bounced back. More than 149,000 cars used the service last month, only 3,000 fewer than the same month in 1996. The growing demand for

E BAVARIA is staging a campaign this summer to attract more British holidaymakers, buoyed by figures showing a 5.5 per cent increase to more than 250,000 visitors from the UK last year. With sterling having gained 20 per cent against the mark within a year, typical prices in Bavaria have fallen to about £15 per carries a big gun.

The travel company's luxury bus was "waiting for spares". so my son Joe and I boarded a boneshaker with tiny fixed windows, no suspension, no air-conditioning, a psychedelic colour scheme and a mad

Jolting eastwards along very rough dirt roads in the steaming heat, we shed civilisation as the hours passed. Then the road ran out and we boarded high-speed canoes to travel for 150km down the Aguarico River towards our home from home - a riverboat hotel.

However, the cance broke down and we had to wait for an hour to be rescued, helplessly swept along, round and round in midstream, hours from our destination.

The muddy brown swirling river, 10ft deep and sometimes half a kilometre wide, is full of huge, partly submerged logs stuck in the hottom, their jagged ends sticking out of the water. It is also home to Cayman crocodiles and piranha fish. Precariously transferring canoes mid-river, we arrived at our riverboat hotel at dusk feeling absolutely exhausted. Finally locating our tiny, stifling cabin, we first had to eject an enormous moth or middling-sized bat (we did not look too closely), before falling asleep. At 6am, the hoat cruised slowly down the river close to the bank. By 0.20am I had seen five different kinds of

There was absolutely no interference from mankind except for the occasional Indian hut built of grass, wood and bamboo, standing on stilts to keep out floods and snakes.

The travel company had built a three-mile boardwalk through the jungle. It rots away continuously and has to be repainted all the time, like the Forth Bridge. The handrail was slimy and the guide had to remove a large snake and several 5inlong fluffy white caterpillars. shaped like Toblerone chocolate bars and looking exactly like miniature Dougals. There were towering ma-with huge buttresses like rock-

macaw, hundreds of parrots, a toucan and some howler monkeys. The parrots flew overhead in huge whirring flocks and screeched like mad.

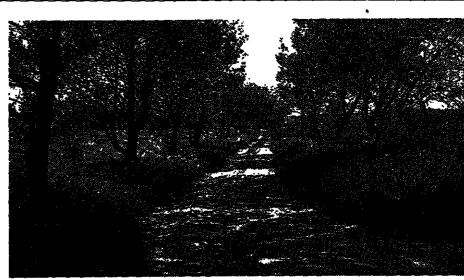

Fireflies, flashing at nightfall, made it look as if there was a huge city just behind the trees with its brilliant lights being intermittently eclipsed by the leaves as we moved by.

On the way home, the guide was a Cofan Indian, built like Mike Tyson. He sat high on the canoe prow as it roared up the river, indicating left and right with his enormous hands to the "blind" steerer at the back to avoid the jagged logs and sandbanks.

Pink river dolphins played around our boat - sightless and without pigment because of the opaque water they live in - with nothing to see and hogany trees, giant fig trees

A peaceful Island awaits you only two hours

It's been called Britain's best kept secret, and while we want to spread the word, we don't want to shout about it.

We want you to enjoy the sandy bays and chalk cliffs; the woods and downs; the creeks and rivers; the pubs and restaurants.

No one knows this Island better than Wightlink. There, we've given it away. We're talking about the Isle of Wight, just off the South Coast.

If you want to know where to stay and what you can do, just phone us and we'll help you plan the perfect break.

CHESS

by Raymond Keene

York, starting early May, between Garry Kasparov and IBM's Deep Blue Mark II computer, may well prove to be a benchmark in the public perception of chess. For last year's match between the two, which Kasparov won by 4 points to 2. the computer was able to visualise 500 million different positions per second. Now, the IBM boffins have raised this to a staggering 1 billion per second. The prize fund has more than doubled too, to $1.1 million. Last year's match brought IBM $200 million worth of publicity and six million hits on the Internet for the final game.

This year, the global publicity has already been intense, including a two-page feature in Time magazine and predictions by IBM that there will be 20 million Internet hits per day. Given that the Atlanta 1996 Olympics only attracted 10 million hits in all, this suggests that this may be the chess match of the century, dwarfing even Fischer-Spassky in its penetration of the public consciousness worldwide

Last year I predicted before the match that Kasparov would win by 4 points to 2, and that was indeed the outcome. This year, even given the machine's improved capacity, I leel that Kasparov's valuable experience from the contest a year ago will still enable him to come out on top. Once again, I predict a 4-2 victory for Kasparov. Here is one of his wins from a year ago.

In many games from this match a trade by a white bishop on g5 against a black knight on fo led to insurmountable pawn weaknesses for the defender. Here Kasparov avoids this.

WINNING MOVE

By Raymond Keene White to play. This position is from the game Keitlinghaus - Miles, Bad Worishofen 1997. White, having displaced the black king, has a very strong initiative. However, he appears to have a problem with the pin against his knight on co. How did he solve this problem in fine style? Send your answer on a postcard to The Times, 1 Pennington Street. London El 9XN. The first correct answer drawn on Thursday will win a year's subscription to the Staunton Society, which includes a free invitation to the annual dinner at Simpson's-in-the-Strand. The answer will be published next

BRIDGE

by Robert Sheehan

A "FORCING PASS" occurs in auctions in which it is not logical for a partnership to pass out the opposition's bid. If a player makes a forcing pass, his partner must not allow the auction to die - he must double the upponents or bid on. Here is a good example, from the £100 game at TGR's bridge club. The proprietor, Howard Cohen, was West, playing with regular winner Colin Simpson (East).

1H Pass Pass 7H Contract: Seven Hearts doubled by South Lead: king of spades

The first non-routine bid was North's jump to Four Hearts, with which he hoped to put pressure on East-West. Over Four Hearts. East might have bid Five Hearts. As that would commit his side to Six Diamonds, it would be a grand slam try showing first-round con-trol of hearts. The direct Six Diamonds was better - North-South were less likely to sacrifice, plenty to spare. When that came back to North, he could see that Six hearts would be cheap. He might have thought of that earlier - bidding Five or Six Hearts at his first turn would have made it harder for East-West.

East's pass of Six Hearts was the "forcing pass". His side had voluntarily bid to Six Diamonds, so it was inconceivable that they would allow opponents who could only bid to Four Hearts to play in Six Hearts undoubled. What Pass said was "partner, I think that it is possible we might make Seven Diamonds", In particular, in this sequence it guaranteed first round control of hearts - if East had a heart loser, he would have doubled

Six Hearts. West's bid of Seven Diamonds was well-reasoned. He could see that East must have first-round control of all the suits for his jump to Six Diamonds and subsequent pass of Six Hearts — East could hardly bid like that if his clubs or spades were only queen high. It was possible that East was missing the king of diamonds or the queen of clubs, but to bid a grand slam in this situation you don't need very good odds - all you are doing is swapping a smallish penalty in Six Hearts for the chance of a big plus in Seven Diamonds. On this hand North-South would only concede 400 (ie. 3 off. less 100 for honours) in Six Hearts doubled, so West can afford to try for 2140 in Seven Diamonds if he makes it around a quarter of the time.

Finally, when South bid Seven Hearts West correctly doubled (Pass would invite East to go 7 NT), and found the best lead of the king of spades to take it four off.

The quality of the colour video well with one of its own titles, listless racing game lets you drive large trucks with even larger tyres but the vehicles and the racing lack throttle. Two other tiresome new titles are Eagle Peak's Takeru and Emme Interactive's The Sacred Mirror of Kofun. Takeru is a dire oriental caper on two CD-Roms, which involves much dreary clicking around but no adventure. The occasional pay-offs of cheap cartoon clips, hastily over-dubbed in English, merely confuse. The Sacred Mirror of Kofun is a stagnant underwater saga which comes on three CD-Roms, but discs two and three might never get an airing.

To close, a look at two of the entries from Cyberspace Thirty-One. Simon Tondeur of Battersea, south London, praised Eidos Interactive's Tomb Raider, a game for the Sony PlayStation, and blamed it for poor exam results. "Tomb Raider is a platform game with a bonus, it is 3D," he wrote. "Although hard to master at first (the controls are quite complicated), once you've got the hang opted for Sierra's Shivers on PC CD-Rom for Windows '95. "Last night I was locked in a strange museum with a bunch of evil spirits," he explained. "As you explore the various themed rooms within the museum you must capture the spirits hiding in the exhibits, but don't venture too close or the spirits will absorb some of your life essence. You must solve puzzles to gain access to other areas of the museum and the graphicsand music in each room create an absorbing atmosphere. It is so absorbing, in fact, that my first spirit encounter caused me to jump out of my chair."

But there are drawbacks to Shivers: "The only criticism is the gameplay, puzzles and atmosphere make up for that. Shivers is another game, like Myst, that you'll play again and again."

No 3406: Morrissey by 149

EACH OF THE nine numbered morris displays contains three eight-letter words (reading in order clockwise or anti-clockwise beginning anywhere) and eight three-letter words reading towards the centre, entered on the spots that occur at line junctions. The eight-letter words are clued in their groups in alphabetical order (two being proper names). The three-letter words (apart from those in all the diagonals, which are to be deduced) are clued in lines which include their definitions and a total anagram of their entered letters. In these clues three contain the definitions in their correct order.

Free from charges

Banking with First Direct is free because we do not charge Cheque Account customers for everyday banking transactions, even if you're overdrawn. And all our customers automatically receive an overdraft up to £250 – also free of any fees. So compared to other high street bank accounts you're better off with First Direct from day one. We're a member of the HSBC Group which is one of the largest banking and financial services organisations in the world, and in the course of a year you'll find we offer more cost effective current account banking. And the service we provide means you benefit in many other ways too.

By telephone, 24 hours a day

We provide the ultimate in convenience. You can bank with us at any time, 365 days (and nights) of the year, from wherever there's a telephone, in your home, office or car. And all UK calls are charged at local rates.

Personal and professional service

Every call is answered by our Banking Representatives. They have all they need at their fingertips to deal with your day-to-day banking needs. And when you require more specialised assistance, such as a loan, they can instantly refer you to someone who can help.

Getting cash is easy

Every Cheque Account customer receives the First Direct

Card. This allows you to withdraw up to £500 a day from over 11,500 cash machines around the UK, including those of Midland. It also guarantees cheques for £100 and includes the Switch payment facility.

So is paying bills

Our service includes a free bill payment service. Simply call, tell us who to pay, how much and when, and we do it. This means you can arrange to pay your bills at the most convenient time without the need to keep having to remember to organise it.

A full banking service with more benefits

As well as our Cheque Account we offer saving, borrowing, travel and insurance services cost effectively by telephone. Take saving; our rates are always competitive, we offer transfers to and from your Cheque Account. So your money is always working hard without the need for you to do the same.

We work hard to maintain the service

The best people to demonstrate the quality of a banking service are its customers – 87%* of ours have recommended us to their friends and colleagues in the last 12 months.

Opening an account is easy too

We also appreciate how daunting changing bank accounts can be. So we make it easy. Easy to open a First Direct account, then easy to arrange for your salary to be paid in and easy for all your standing orders and direct debits to be transferred to your account. And it's easy (and free) to find out more right now. Call us on 0800 24 24 24 or complete the coupon.

Triumph booms back to the top

Britain's late lamented bike industry is

ohn Bloor, jobbing plasterer, used a motorcycle as working transport with a sidecar to ferry his buckets, ladders, and trowels between jobs. When he moved from plastering walls to developing property on a major scale, an affection for motorcycles and respect for them as practical transport survived his transition to millionaire status.

When Bloor chose to com-mit a slice of his fortune to reviving a moribund British motorcycle industry and restoring the Triumph marque, the decision seemed bold if not impertinent.

It took him 13 years and an estimated £80 million, but Bloor's faith in Triumph has been rewarded. For the first time in years, a Triumph tops the sales charts. Figures from the Motor Cycle Industry Association show the Daytona T595 beating Honda, Suzuki, Yamaha, BMW and Kawasaki in the category for machines over 900cc.

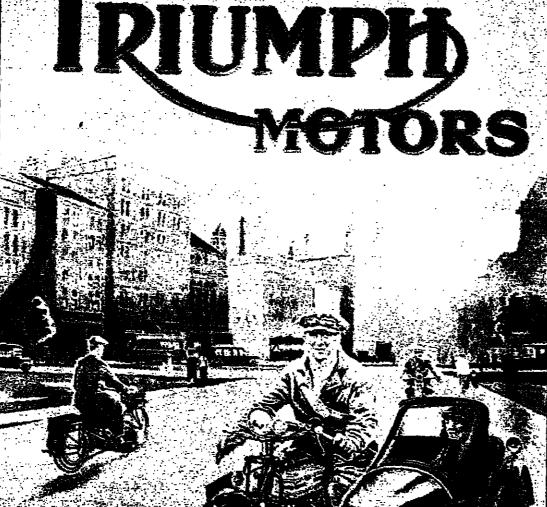

Triumph sold 525 of the 19,999 bikes in the first quarter of the year, satisfying part of a waiting list for the bike that stunned the industry: Triumph notched up 1,400 orders before its launch. Triumph sold 15,000 bikes last year, with 80 per cent for export, mainly to the United States and Germany. Yet when Bloor bought the Triumph name, it had all the charisma of a rusting moped. The giants of quality massproduction in Japan - Honda, Kawasaki, Yamaha, and Suzuki - had consigned the most respected names of British motorcycling to history. Lacking vision, investment, and leadership, the industry had vanished as a major

ure nostalgia was never likely to figure in Bloor's decision to buy the intellectual rights to the company, which was by 1983 a failed workers' cooperative producing an aged range of machines. The name Triumph had a powerful resonance, but his investment was based on cold-eyed pragma-tism, an assessment of the potential market and how Triumph could serve it at the

More than four years of research, planning, and cautious development by Bloor's team at Hinckley, Leicestershire, have yielded success. A new Triumph leaves the production line every six minutes and 32 seconds of the working day. On annual sales worth about £100 million, Triumph is now returning a profit, although the level is lower than Bloor could expect from less audacious investment John Bloor is a very private man, rarely, if ever, giving interviews and preferring that the quality and popularity of his motorcycles and the successful growth of Triumph

John Bloor's team ditched the nostalgia for old days and old ways that dogged the 1970s industry. Now, quality manufacture and rigorous marketing have put the new Daytona on top of the bestseller list speak for him. His cover was blown though when he was named the li6th richest man in Britain, worth an estimated £175 million through his Bloor Holdings.

A cushion of such wealth helps but the investment was a mighty gamble. Now though, a second factory is under construction in Hinckley and the plan is that between them, two assembly lines could ultimately turn out 50,000 Triumphs a year, hardly a threat to volume but a valuable corner of the market. A number of

gridlock, the nightmare of city centre parking, along with rising fuel, road tax and insurance costs all conspire to make two-wheeled travel increasingly attractive. Stylish looks, the great reliability of the new generation of motorcycles and a perception that motorcycling has become saf-er, backed by statistics and mandatory training, add to motorcycling's new appeal.

The cult of the born-again bikers, with cash to spend and rose-tinted memories of their youth, has also been significant. Clothing is smart, en-gines start at the press of a button and no longer spew oil; £10,000 buys you the performance of a Porsche and two wheels can be a lifestyle statement. The queue Add to these a touch of jingoistic for the pride and the formula starts to add up to success.

factory's More than 80 per cent of the 2,500 new T595 components used on the Triumph Daytona production line come from the UK stunned and nearly half are manufactured or motorbike finished within the Hinckley factory. makers This is as British as you get these days. the company says, but searching for quality means using Italian wheels. Japanese electronics and a French fuel-injection system. Bloor's design and engineer-ing team listens hard, digests what the market requires and responds accordingly. Hence a line of solid, dependable machines culminating in the 128bhp Daytona.

Bloor has generated a palpable sense of family among his 450 workers and the boss is apt to appear, sleeves rolled up, alongside his managers. The word is that Bloor intends to keep Triumph as a relatively small but flexible company, able to react quickly to market demand. Rising production has allowed the company to branch out from the uncompromising modular formula of in-line three or four-cylinder engines with many identical parts shared between models, to more specialist concepts, which the ccessories, too, are becoming more than a nice little earner. although still far short of Harley Davidson's success in allegedly profiting more from Harley memorabilia than from bikes.

Triumph now has the machines to service demand. from the leather-suited macho racers to the born-again bikers who want simply to burble down memory lane. Their publicity material is slick, stylish, and highly professional, presenting motorcycles as elegant and fun.

Perhaps, though, Bloor may feel a tinge of regret that there is nothing in there for a jobbing plasterer wanting transport for himself, his buckets, ladders, and trowels.

 TRIUMPH was founded by German immigrants, Siegfried Bettman and Maurice Shulte. Bicycle makers since the 1880s, they fitted a Belgian Minerva engine to a bicycle frame in 1902. Within three years, the company had its own tiny three horsepower engine. DURING the First World War, the British Army bought 30,000 Model H

550cc machines. BY THE 1920s, Triumph was turning out 1,000 Model P 500cc machines a week: price £43.

 JACK SANGSTER, owner of Ariel, another of Britain's famous motorcycling names, bought Triumph in 1936 to save it from financial disaster. POSTWAR Triumph was a major dollar earner; the Thunderbird, Tiger and others all much desired. ●THE 650cc Thunderbird, introduced in 1949, was a hit with metallic blue paintwork and distinctive badging. ■ By 1951, it was all change again, Triumph sold to the powerful arms-tobikes group, BSA. ■ A STREAMLINED Triumph, ridden by Johnny Allen, hit 214mph on the Bonneville salt flats in the USA in 1956 - but authorities refused to ratify the record. Triumph didn't care, for the publicity turned out . . . a triumph. ◆THE BONNEVILLE, named after the record attempt, became Triumph's most famous bike, launched in 1959 as a

were built. MALCOLM UPHILL set the first 100mph Isle of Man lap for a production bike in 1969 on a Bonneville. ■ MOODY Marlon Brando turned the USA on to the legend of Triumph by riding one in the cult 1954 film, The Wild One. He was the hoodlum biker terrorising a small Western town. The movie was banned all over America. • LESS MOODY, but magnificent in her own little way, Baywatch babe Pamela Anderson rode a Thunderbird in her movie debut, Barb Wire.

ODDLY, Triumph, the car, was nothing to do with the motorcycles. The bikemaker turned carmaker in 1923 but folded in 1939. The car business was bought by Standard which resurrected the line in 1945. The ill-fated TR7 was the last Triumph sports car.

• IN THE 1960s, Triumph was making 250,000 machines a year.

• ULTIMATE 1960s café racer was the Triton — custom-built with a Norton frame and Triumph engine • FIRST REAL "superbike" was the

1970s Triumph Trident, beating Honda's CB750 to the honour: threecylinders, 750cc . . . and fast. ● IN 1973, BSA went bankrupt and

Triumph became part of the great nationalisation experiment when the Labour government bailed the business out and set up the Meriden co-operative. • MERIDEN collapsed in 1983 and John Bloor bought the Triumph rights from the receiver - but a new Triumph didn't appear for nearly eight years. ● TRIUMPH is a rare survivor of nearly 80 British motorcycle makers, all based in and around Coventry. • BLOOR, SON OF a Staffordshire miner, missed years of schooling through ill health — but is still one of Britain's richest men.

In the pantheon of subjects likely to make an arresting snap, a car park is not highly placed. But this black and white picture was taken back in 1952 and showed the car park at the first Harry Ramsden's.

Around lunchtime on the day that I saw this picture, a friend of mine had raised one of the commoner themes of modern car commentary, which is that all cars look alike This is a modern mantra, like saving that all bread

DRIVEN TO DISTRACTION

Peter Barnard

I have for a long time gone along with the view that most cars look alike, but standing in front of the 1952 picture of Harry Ramsden's park I was struck by a remarkable fact: all the cars looked alike. There were rows of bogstandard Ford Prefects and Morris 8s and apart from a few bumper and radiator details, anyone but a complete anorak would have been pressed to tell them apart.

Of course there are some fascinating contrasts about the photograph, like the fact that all the cars in it are British (or built in Britain, to pacify readers who often write to remind me that Ford is an American company). And, notwithstanding the monochrome nature of the photograph, it was clear that most of the cars were black or dark blue.

But all the small cars came from more or less the same mould and all the large cars did, too. So there must be some other reason why we bemoan the uniformity of modern car shapes and it is probably to do not so much with nostalgia but with the fact that most of the people doing the bemoaning are of

Our perception that cars look the same arises not only from age but from two other factors: the number of cars on the road and our particular view of them. # Prince's bulletproof guarantee

tank, says Kevin Eason

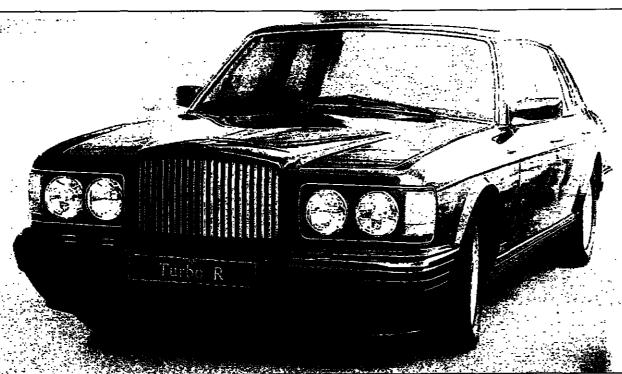

The choice was made in heaven for the average motorist: a Jaguar. BMW 7-series or a Bentley Turbo. Intriguingly, the issue of back pain topped the agenda when the Prince of Wales ordered his new official cars. And the usual criteria of price, performance and safety which clinch the deal for most of us - are considered in a different light when the future king picks a car. For them, safety does not just mean how well their car lares in crash tests, but no well it could withstand an IRA homb or attack from a spiner. Performance means how well it could outstrip a potential hijacker's car, while price... well, that is almost meaningless to the companies asked to bid for the honour of providing Royal transport. The Prince is to get two new official cars - though only after a row with the Metropolitan Police over what they should be. The Met is to provide a specially built, armour-plated Jaguar XJ saloon to transport the Prince around London. But he has also chosen a new Bentley Turbo R for longer trips, with £100,000 worth of security improvements which will be added at Rolls-Royce's factory at Crewe in Cheshire. Even though the Met favours the Jaguar's high performance and handling capabilities. Prince Charles was not keen on what he views as a cramped interior. After several polo-playing accidents,

Bentley's 6.7-litre engine can propel the two-tonne body to 160mph, even with the weight of its security features the Prince is acutely aware of the problems of back pain when travelling long distances and insisted that the Jaguar's cabin was too small for trips outside London.

e then inquired at which BMW. makes its gorgeous 7-series, boasting more room for rearseat passengers than the Jag. BMW was anxious to boost prestige by providing a car, but officials were horrified that the Prince would be seen in a non-British model.

Rolls-Royce solved the problem by agreeing to add special safety features to the Bentley Turbo, already one of the Prince's favourite cars. Although the safety features are officially secret, they will include bulletproof glass, a steel bomb-proof shield under the car and on the roof, and a satellite tracking system so that police can follow the car's position at all times. There will also be an elaborate communications system on board. The advantage of the Bentley is its incredible 6.7-litre engine which can propel the two-tonne body to 160mph even with the extra weight of the security features. Both the Jag and the BMW would need suspension strengthening and engine tweaks, to handle the weight of the equipment. The Prince is expected to use the Bentley most, particularly at a time when he is thought a target for IRA terrorists. Yet the concern over Royal safety is in stark contrast to the cars used daily by the Royal family. The Prince's favourite marque remains Aston Martin while Diana, Princess of Wales, has been seen in everything from a Ford Escort to an Audi convertible with no more extra equipment than a decent stereo and a baby seat.

What the Palace appears keen to avoid is being involved in the burgeoning Hello!-style market that has owners adding hundreds or thousands of pounds on to the value of vehicles that can claim some kind of celebrity link.

A brief scan of recent newsstand car magazines reveals sellers offering such gems as King Hussein's Bristol 404 coupé, a Lamborghini Espada driven by Princess Grace of Monaco, and the bullet-proof limousine used by US presi-

Martin Chisholm, head of vintage and veteran cars at Sotheby's, says the attraction of regal second-hands goes further than the lure of owning a piece of blue-blooded

heritage: it also means that the mechanics have been extremely well maintained: "Servicing on such vehicles is done in abundance - after all, you could not have a situation where the royal car broke

AN AVERAGE FAMILY CAR WILL TRAVEL TWO MILES ON JUST A CUP OF PETROL

But the Palace, in an attempt to protect monarchical mystique, has been keen to disguise the royal heritage of the six or so Reliant Scimitars the Princess Royal has owned since the 1970s.

Not that loyal Scimitar ownership is anything to be ashamed of - the sports cars are a world apart from Reliant's better-known threewheelers. The story goes that the Princess's Scimitar love affair began when the Duke of Edinburgh taught her to drive in an early prototype. But asking the Scimitar Owners Club about the Princess's former cars prompts a reverential, "Er, that's all a bit hushhush, you know."

More forthcoming was David Jones, of Graham Walker Ltd in Chester, which now owns the Scimitar manufacturing rights. He says that the Palace and Reliant agreed that the Princess's old cars were not to be sold as ex-Royal vehicles after they were re-turned to the factory. Certainly he says, Reliant removed the Home Office radios, returned their leather interiors to standard, and tried to give them a new identity. But it didn't always happen. "We had the last Reliant-built car that she owned, which she used from July 1986," Jones says. "It came to us complete with her 1420H personal number plate and a hole in the bonnet where her horse mascot had been. "However, when the person who bought it from us telephoned Buckingham Palace to ask about its date of manufacture for registration purposes. they flatly denied that the car had ever had anything to do with the Princess Royal." At least one of the Princess's old Scimitars has successfully sunk into anonymity. Conversely, one Scimitar has been advertised for sale as royally construction owned when Jones says it never had been.

ones is puzzled by the Palace's Scimitar secrecy - and dismissive of the celebrity-car cult. "While the royal link might help people a little bit in selling a Scimitar, I don't think it's that important. The man who bought ours would have done so anyway." John Cadman of Tring.

might well agree - for he has had a tough job exploiting his Rover's regal connections. The chauffeur's logbook that came with the 1968 P5B coupé shows it was used as a limousine in the Scilly Isles to drive the Queen Mother on her tour of the islands, as well as carrying Prince Charles.

The history motivated me to buy the car, and it's given me a special thrill in owning it." he says. "It's even still got the original flagpole." But it has not proved such an effective lure now he wants to sell it. "I had the car in with a dealer. who was asking £10,000 in the hope that a Japanese buver would be interested. However, nothing came of it, so I'm trying to sell it myself for £5,000 — no offers," apan is the centre of world car manufacturing, where they can make anything, anytime cheaper, faster and with more ingenuity than anyone else on earth. Unless you want a sports car... then even the Japanese have to come to Britain for help.

Norfolk: home of Japan's best sportster

When two Japanese motoring enthusiasts, Yoshikazu Tomita and Kikuo Kaira, wanted to make the step from car tuners to car builders they discovered they had a problem. Japan covers car manufacturers in red tape to such a extent that the pair decided they could not build a sports model in their home country. even though they were adding hundreds of names to their order books.

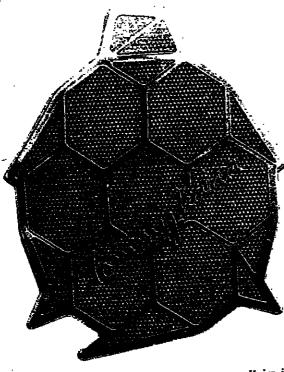

So Kaira, who spent 25 years in motorsport as a driver and engineer designing Formula 2 cars, turned to his the friend, Hiroshi Fushida, an ex-Formula One racing driver and now managing director at Toms GB, an engineering and race car design company based in Hingham, Norfolk.

If they couldn't build the car at home, then they would move to the next best place Britain, with its high-technology automotive skills. Norfolk was even better, with Hingham just around the corner from Lotus.

Strange then, the likeness between the Japanese new-comer and Lotus's own car. the Elise, a model which has won as much praise as any new car for years. While Kaira designed and developed a prototype of their dream car. Fushida was helping launch Tomita UK, and in June last year production began on the £26,000 Tommy Kaira ZZ in a small factory in Norfolk, with 300 orders already waiting to be delivered at home in Japan.

Japanese motorists have had a love affair with British cars since they first saw the Mini. Sports cars from Caterham, TVR, Lotus and Morgan are highly desirable

But the Tomita is the coolest Japanese car to own because it is designed by a race car expert, a Japanese FI racing driver had a hand in its development and — this is the coolest bit — it is built in Norfolk, Great Britain. Japanese motorists consider owning a car built down the road from Lotus the cleverest and trendiest thing available. Fushida admits that building the Tommy Kaira in the UK means a 20 per cent reduction in costs compared with Japan, but there is a another reason why Tomita chose Norfolk Kikuo Kaira wanted to build a car in 'Chapman Country", where Colin Chapman, founded Lotus, one of the world's most famous brand names. "Britain has a great history for lowvolume sports cars, it was an ideal place to bring production." says Fushida. The man in charge of the Tommy Kaira production line, John Freeman, has built cars for DeLorean and Lotus. Starting with 37 sketches and a handful of instructions in Japanese, Tomita UK took five months, from February to June last year, to source the parts for the little sports car. Only dedicated petrol-heads would recognise the Fiat Coupé rear lights and the Nissan Micra side indicators. Arch Motors in Huntingdon, Cambridgeshire, produces the aluminium tubs and Rawlson Dover provides the fibreglass bodies. Eighty per cent of the car's 2,500 parts are from the UK. Eleven workers at the Norfolk firm assemble them for shipping to Japan, where Tomita sticks on the badges.

Like the Lotus Elise, the

Tommy Kaira is more of a road-going race car than a sports car. The interior is bare aluminium, the floor, side steps, pedals, even the gear linkage is naked metal. There are no windows, glovebox, stereo, door locks or boot.

The lights, wipers and indicators are controlled by paddle switches, aircraft style. And it's a tight squeeze into the bucket race seats.

Kaira's taste for simplicity is evident in several neat design features, such as the drilled aluminium pedals and the machine-finished aluminium gearlever. The feather-light fibreglass doors are only sixinches high and have no handles (there is a discreet lever inside instead), and the fair-weather roof spends most of its time cleverly disguised as an engine cover.

The full retro effect is completed with rear-wheel drive and a mid-mounted two-litre engine supplied by Nissan with the fuel injection removed and replaced by quadruple carburettors. Yes, air-breathing carbs redolent of 1960s fire-breathing sports cars — old-fashioned yet full of a fuel-injected Elise could rival. Tuned for 185 brake horsepower and weighing just 670kg the Tommy Kaira can reach 60mph in around 4.5 seconds. It recently won a 400metre sprint test in a Japanese motoring magazine, beating a Lotus Elise, Porsche Boxster, Renault Spider and BMW Z3. Top speed is claimed to be close to 149mph, so clearly the Ford is staging a mid-year relaunch for the Escort. But it needs a whole new model, reports Kevin Eason

'Britain's favourite car is in a serious mid-life crisis

eports of the death of the Ford Escort have clearly been exaggerated... but there is no doubt that Britain's favourite car is facing a serious midlife crisis.

What are we to make of the fact that Ford has brought forward a package of changes which it launched this week as 1997 mid-model-year improvements? Since when did the half-year point become the focus for a relaunch? Probably since Ford's top brass took some time off from plotting their grandiose world plans and had a look around Europe's showrooms.

With a replacement for the Escort still three years away, the venerable small Ford faces tough competition from some startlingly good rivals. The Escort looks like an old-timer up against upstarts such as the Renault Megane, Peugeot's 306, Volkswagen's Golf and the Rover 200, and Ford needs to start shaking up the car's moribund image.

So in comes this mid-year wide-ranging series of changes", as Ford puts it. though most will surely pass most motorists by unless they understand the labyrinthine complexity of Ford's price and specifications lists. From the outside, the relaunch - which will be trumpeted in new television advertising - seems to be little more than the introduction of a few cosmetic changes which will hardly have Britain's carbuying public queueing up around the showrooms.

Try to contain your excitement, but this week's press release from Ford lists some of the significant enhance-ments we can all look forward to: new body-colour bumpers, new velour interior trims — including a unique Jacouard fabric (a weave of variegated weave or pattern, so there) - rear head-restraints for the Si, even driver seat power adjustment on all

Body-colour bumpers? Doesn't seem such a big deal but don't fret: it does get better; estates are now the same price as four and five-door models - an £825 cut on the estate if you take the 1.8 l6v Ghia model. LX and Si models are also the same price, with both getting more "goodies": the LX, sporty bumpers and foglamps; the Si, 15-inch wheels, new seats and body-coloured mirrors. There is also the return of the GTi, a new entry for the Ford range which has dumped the old XR badge in favour of the one most recognised by buyers. The £14,000 sportster gets the 1.8-litre, 16-valve engine together with anti-lock brakes and sports seats as standard.

And Ford is giving customers the choice of doing without a sunroof in favour of airconditioning — though that is an extra £250, please.

t bottom, this is little more than a marketing splurge designed to try to distract car buyers from the obvious fact that the model is being rapidly overtaken by rivals and

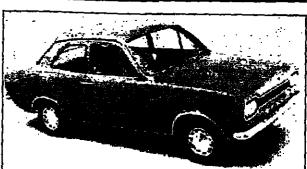

Halewood on Merseyside which makes the car for Britain, is losing the Escort to a German sister factory which will produce the car for the next century - and there is a hot chance that even the Escort name will be ditched as Ford searches out a glitzier image for its next small car.

The Escort might have a new summer suit but it will have to cover its middle-aged frame for some time yet while Ford gets the next generation ready to take over. With more than 4 million sold, the Escort is facing up to the sad fact that age has overtaken it.

But whatever the new model looks like, whatever it is called and however good it is, it will have to be pretty special to fill the place in British life taken over the years by the Escort.

New Escort? No danger. Helen Mound spotted few differences, and no improvements

EVEN THE MOST experienced fan of Ford's midrange hatchbacks, saloons and estates would be hard pushed to tell what's new about it.

I looked at the top, the sides, even underneath but I still struggled to spot a single change. The dashboard is the familiar Ford layout; the dials and switches are unchanged; the steering wheel and handbrake are the same as on mevious models.

Out on the road, I discovered the same weary 1.8-litre, 16-valve engine which has marathon runner facing a steep hill at the 24th mile. It also sounds rough compared with other 1.8 powerplants. If you're prepared to work the gearbox and accelerator constantly, you can force the engine to perform, though even the slightest incline manages to shave 20mph off the top speed. And the gearchange remains rubbery and inexact.

I systematically worked my way around the cabin looking for an element of the Escort's newness for this much-publicised mid-year relaunch. Nothing technical or cosmetic appeared to have changed. Even the traditional Ford build quality seems to have remained undisturbed: my car had at least three infuriating rattles 1 couldn't locate. Undeterred I took a long slow walk around the outside of the car looking for changes to its exterior. Surely here I could spot the new bit? But no, the hody panels, bumpers, badges, door handles, even the choice of exterior colours all seemed unchanged. Eventually I cracked it: Ford's shiny new style alloys. They are the only change that a new Escert driver is likely to spot on this car. A thorough scan through the brochure revealed that my

With the "ten Escorts at the same price" advertising campaign launched this week and price reductions of as much as £895 across the range, it seems only a chequebook could really reveal the extent of the changes to the new Ford Escort.

DR DASHBOARD

Good morning, doc-tor, but apologies al-ready for troubling you with what seems like such a trivial problem.

Not at all. The nurse has just given me your notes so let's have a look-see at who you are: ummmmm. Mr Escort, Mr F. Escort, aged 30 and you come from Halewood on Merseyside. Yes, I can see that would be a problem. Previously quite successful; you don't look the sort who is suffering.

On the face of it, I am not. I am top of the tree really, most popular for the past 15 years, best in the organisation after some old codger from years ago who seemed to think he was in the A-Team — called himself Mr Model T or something. Now I am looking at redundancy, just like that, after all these years of service. I can't take rejection. What can I do?

See what you mean. A See what you mean.
Millions have faced redundancy and bounced back. This is surely no more than a mid-life crisis, Mr Escort, the sort of thing we all go through. Describe your symptoms, if you will.

Well, I've stopped get-Well, I we suppose of fing hot flushes — I think somebody sorted out the coolant problem - but I'm definitely heavier and not as sprightly as a lot of the newcomers to this game. I have a horrible feeling that I'm getting past it. There must be life left in the old banger yet. Put this behind you and try to look at life afresh. Put away those old flares wheel-arches, that is. Try finding new friends, a new look, perhaps. After all, it has worked for the Labour

As an old Ford, am I past it?

Come on, doc. I've gone for all the usual remedies: a new suit, a bit of makeup, but nobody's fooled. I am basically over the hill and the company knows that. I fear the worst.

Which is what? So the A organisation is enamoured with something new. It never lasts and you can prove you are the top honcho as you have always been.

This time it's serious. My job is going to Germany and they are bringing in a new model to replace me. Apparently. they are even going to take my title away. so Escort will not exist any more inside the organisation. [1] probably become something obscure. There is a precedent it happened before to a he was replaced by some thing called the Mondeo. The name doesn't even mean anything.

Be fair, the work and cort has its own connoches the sort of tations: you know, the sort of car that needs a couple of shots of four-star to loosen up, only gets lively after a few fivers have changed hands and then it will take you anywhere you want. Stop moaning: you are a living leg end, sorry, I think I meant legend there. What help do you need, or is this the sort of mid-life crisis which will end in tears, running away from home, setting up with some pretty young Japanese company which pretends it has something better to offer?

Actually, my little sister already did that. You know her - Fiesta. Well, she has got alongside that Mazda on a 1-2-1 number out of Dagenham. You can't tell them apart these days. Sickening really, and there I am being all individual and Britain's top of the pops. Is there no way to hang on to my public? Will they all desert me?

A Sorry, Escort old chap. But the only way out of this is to cut your prices. Yes, I know cheapest isn't always best but you're on the way down, and better to slide out of view gracefully, well-remembered, than go down kicking and screaming into history's scrapyard. Suck that radiator grille in. straighten your velour upholstery and look the world straight in the headlamps. chum of mine called Sierra; You are still a star.

Passat: now the one to make a pass at

Stuart Birch enjoys VW's fine revamp of a formerly dull car

Time was when the Volkswagen Passat at-Iracted such epithets as "worthy" and "solid" — not words which send sales soaring and customer pulses racing.
But now things have changed. The name's the same but the new Passat can be associated with adjectives such as stylish and handsome. while more powerful versions are positively sporty. So confident is VW of its new car's impending success that it predicts sales will increase fourfold in the next year.

The new Passat has been a long time coming to Britain. and for months, dealers' showrooms have had left-handdrive examples on display because production of righthand-drive cars was lagging. Now they are here — and they are not disappointing.

The Passat needs to pinch sales from the Vauxhall Vectra, Ford Mondeo and Peugeot 406: it has plenty going for it. Major attractions are its quality, refinement, and spacious interior and boot.

But as many a company proud of its engineering has earnt to its cost, cars need to look good, too.

VW says the new Passat is much more of a "want-to-own" car than the old model. So it has a distinctively domed roof and pronounced wheel arches which are significant elements of the new Beetle, already seen in concept form. Designers have given it an attractive nose, ensured that its deep flanks (the window line is derived from sister company Audi's highly successful A4. The ride is fairly soft and the car rolls a bit when hustled through a corner, but the handling is fine and the car's general roadholding is excellent.

Engine choice is wide, including a 100bhp 1.6, a brace of 1.8s with 125 and 150bhp (thanks to a turbo) and a 1.9litre turbodiesel with 90 or 110bhp. Coming later will be a VR5 2.3-little and the 30-valve 193bhp V6 which will make the top Passat a real scorcher

entry-level 1.6 litre Passat E undoubtedly offers good value for money, with anti-lock brakes, central locking with security protection, twin airbags, driver's seat height adjustment, front electric windows, front and rear seatbelt tensioners, height and reachadjustable steering wheel.

power steering, radio/cassette and a good deal more. However, performance is unexciting: steep hills call for plenty of gearchanging. Motorway cruising speeds see the engine revving up towards 4,000rpm, which is too high.

Much better is the delightful 110hhp turbodiesel. This fine engine gets the Passat to 60mph in about 11.5 seconds and on to 122mph, says VW. It At £13,995 on the road, the needs only a gallon of fuel every 56.5 miles at 75mph. Of the other petrol engines available at present, the 125bhp 1.8-litre is lively but the 150bhp with light-pressure turbo is positively lusty, taking the Passat to 60mph in 8.5 seconds. It suits the car admirably.

every 47.5 miles in town and ike the new Audi A6, the Passat's interior is all a pleasant, cosseting ambience. It looks particularly good in lighter colours, and upmarket SE versions with wood trim and (slippery) wood gearlever knob are very classy. Neat design points include a cleverly designed foldaway twin cup/can holder. All VWs get a three-year mechanical warranty and the Passat also has an li-year body protection warranty. In the autumn, VW will add an estate to the range, which will be about £1,000 more than the equivalent saloon version. Automatic transmission is available across the range. For the three highest-powered Passats - 20v turbo, VR5 and V6 - there is the auto-plusmanual Tiptronic system. The top-of-the-range V6 has fourwheel drive as standard and its price on the road will be a highly competitive £21,841.

Passat has attractive nose

Passat's residual values are predicted to remain high. CAP Monitor reckons the 1.65 expected to be a popular version, particularly with companies - will retain 46 per cent of its value after three years or 60,000 miles, compared with 33 per cent for the Vectra 1.6LS, 32 per cent for a 406 LBLX and 34 per cent for the Laguna 1.8RT

Which is another reason why VW is confident that a lot of potential customers are waiting to make a pass at the new Passat. Until now most have simply passed it by.

CARMART: YOUR GUIDE TO WHAT'S NEW, AND WHAT'S USED, ON THE FORECOURTS

SPARE PARTS

OWNERS of S-class Mercedes-Benz saloons are being warned to take their cars back to dealers for vital brake checks. The cars, made between June, 1995, and December, 1996, will be given a free examination. The recall comes after eight cars worldwide were found to have too small a gap between the front wheels and the brake hoses, which could lead to the wheels coming into contact with the hoses on full lock. Mercedes says there is no danger of brake failure, but wants to inspect the 3,096 cars in Britain which might be affected. The recall is a blot on the record for Mercedes, which has been enjoying record sales in Britain: its C and E-class saloons are mounting huge opposition for BMW while the S-class has also recovered from rocky early sales

■ AUTOMATIC versions of Ford's Scorpio Ghia X are now £1,000 cheaper. Ford says that leather interior trim is now standard across the Scorpio range while prices of the Ultima model come down by £510. Free mobile telephones are available with each new Ford.

PRICES for the Rover 600 range are up an average 1.8 per cent, but the company boasts a sales increase of 25 per cent over the past two months. Selling the 600 has been a struggle for Rover, the car never really capturing the public imagination, outgunned by Ford's Mondeos at the lower end and the BMW 3-series and Mercedes C-class at the other. However, Rover is including extras to sell cars, so in come revisions to the ride, new colours, standard airconditioning, and alloy wheels on two-litre models. The range starts at £15,140 on the road for the 618i.

Sports car for shy extroverts

ROAD TEST

illed as Britain's first Sub-£13,000 sports sa-loon to offer air-conditioning as standard, the Seat Cordoba SXE offers more than cold air - it also has undemanding behaviour and impeccable road manners.

The Curdoba SXE qualifies as sub-£13,000 car only by five pounds, and as a sports saloon because it has been equipped with a 100 brake horsepower engine, which does indeed give it eager performance, though it is hardly a Tarmac-

Seat is part of the Volkswagen Group, so not surpris-ingly there is plenty of VW engineering and technology in the Cordoba but it has sufficient individuality to mark it out as different from the Wolfsburg set Kevin Rose, Seat UK's director, believes buyers of the company's wares to be cautious extroverts. That means they want the warm feeling provided by VW quality and engineering but they also look for a sporty edge and styling that singles out their car - but not too much - from the pack.

The Cordoba fits that need. although its tubby styling failed to set my pulse racing. But driving it on a winding road and using some of its 100bhp, I found the car responsive, enjoyable - yes. even sporty.

it is also very good value for money: the Cordoba SXE comes as standard not only with air conditioning - which is undoubtedly a luxury but also makes a real contribution to safety by helping to keep a driver alert - but also with twin airbags, anti-lock brakes. power steering, remote central locking, anni-theft immobiliser and alarm. There is also a three-year unlimited mileage warranty, something which puts many competitors still offering the single paltry year in the shade.

The Cordoba stayed with me for six weeks and was kept busy. My wife, a teacher in outer London, drove it for her daily commute, a round trip of more than 40 miles, and saw best and worst average fuel consumption per tank-full, of 37 and 33 miles to the gallon of unleaded. She appreciated its enormous boot (school teachers carry enough boxes, books and bags to qualify as freight), its excellent driving position. its quick-to-warm heater, its light controls - although the gearlever handle started to and its snappy performance. She did not like the stretch to the electric window switches and the lack of one-shot driver window opening. She found the Seat's seats - if that mix of title and equipment is not too clumsy — comfortable, but I did not. The car's eager performance and secure road-holding encourages nippy driving but I wanted more seat support during this sort of thing. We were both infuriated by the rear spoiler, which reduced rear vision. Interior decor was unexcit-ing and the dashboard was covered in a sort of simulated rhino hide, or was it elephant, or none of those but a contour map? I'm not sure.

But we were both impressed by the quality of a car at this price level and by its equipment - particularly that love-russant mucha. Cute and bubble-topped, the new-shaped Micra is nearly four years old yet has the edge in looks over many more recent arrivats in the hotiv-contested muni-car market. Made in Britain at Washington, Tyrie and Wear, the Micra packs maximum interior space into its tiny curved bodywork. Available with 1.0 and 1.3-litre petrol engines and three and feathers better the processor.

Beware ex-learner school cars likely to have worn clutches and multiple minor dents and dings to the bodywor because Micra is popular with driving instructors. Camshaft can be noisy and check the cambett has been changed with service AVOID:

Dull solid colours, which are a scne.
Instead go for a shrip metallic to keep your cer's value. Numerous special editions, many created by dealerships, are usually not worth paying extra for.

LOOK FOR:
Cars from 1994 as these will still be covered by the Nissan three year warranty.
The 1.3-fitre engine is the one to go for with its 75bhp making the Micra a fun, nippy car in town and a competent motorway performer. The CVT (constantly variable transmission) version is worth transmission) version is worth considering.

OVERALL:
The 1.3 fire LX, with electric windows, central locking, tinted glass and surroof makes sound value. Various bizarrely-named special editions are worth little more than the cars they are based on. Overall, an excellent small car with good build quality, and great looks.

What to look for in a smart Saab or simple Seat

■ SAAB'S 900 (1989-1995) offers serious professional presence on the road. It also benefits from being just that little bit different, according to the CAP Black Book.

Covering 200,000 miles is no problem for such a solidly built car and one of the best buys is the 1992 K-reg three-door Turbo 16-valve, engines. But if the turbo chatters or which, on average mileage, should whistles noisily, give the car a miss; cost around £9,500. The 900 can be there could be problems ahead. The

FORECOURT

900 is easy to "clock", so check for worn-smooth gear knob, steering wheel and pedal rubbers, indicating it has travelled further than the odometer suggests.

Go for the car with the highest equipment level, and steer clear of a turbo with automatic transmission.

A full dealer service history is a must, otherwise this car is always a joy to drive no matter the mileage, and one that should last forever.

SEAT'S Ibiza (1987-92) is everyman transport cheap, simple, practical and easy to maintain. It also has a dopey name, a bizarre dashboard, can seem flimsy, and loses value quickly. The Ibiza's reputation for poor build-quality means trade in values can prove a shock for the unwary, which makes them cheap to buy but depressing to sell. Cars with one previous owner and a full history are recommended. Good buy is a 1992 K-reg 1.5 GLX five-door on average mileage, which should cost around £3,000. Even on such a recent car, arrange an AA or RAC inspection.

Daihatsu's Italian-designed five-door Move is set to galvanise the minicar market when it goes on sale in Europe next week. It is already a success in Japan, where 200,000 have been sold since 1995

Tive new models are being launched by small-car spe-cialist Daihatsu to take advantage of Europe's hunger for tiny cars.

Daihatsu will spearhead a drive by Japanese carmakers to cash in on the mounting pressures on road space and pollution, launching new models simultaneously across Europe. The firm's objective: a four-fold increase in sales in Britain and a five-fold increase elsewhere in the EU by the Year 2000.

By then the final remnants of the old "gentlemen's agreement", limit-ing the numbers of Japanese-built cars which can be imported into Britain, will have disappeared and it will be open season in all EU markets. European cars under pressure from the new Japanese invasion will include the Ford Ka, the Seat Arosa and its VW equivalent due next year, the Fiat Cinquecento, the forthcoming Mercedes A-Class and Smart city cars, and the Rover Mini and its replacement.

Suzuki, Daihatsu's chief Japanese rival, is also expected to play a substantial role in the impending

Though a specialist in small cars. Daihatsu is neither a newcomer nor a tiddler operation. Founded in 1907, it is one-third owned by Toyota, and last year produced more than 800,000 vehicles — considerably more than Rover, Audi or Volvo. With its imminent torrent of new models, the firm's ambitions in Europe are now clear. Last year Britain was its biggest European market, with 7,500 sales. By the Year 2000 it intends to top 30,000 registrations here annually. Over the next year, Daihatsu UK will spend more on marketing than in the whole of the past five years.

The first new Daihatsu to hit the beaches is the Grand Move, a headon competitor for the new generation of smaller MPVs such as the Renault Megane Scenic, the new European Car of the Year. Powered by a 1.5-litre, four-cylinder, 16-valve unit, it is an exceptionally roomy and adaptable alternative to the small estate. It arrived in UK showrooms on March 31 at £11,500 and £13,500 according to specification, both prices are on-the-road, including a year's road tax. The Move, designed in Italy, will galavanise the minicar market when it goes on sale on Monday. It is already a success in Japan where 200,000 have been sold since 1995.

Under 11ft long and only 4ft7in wide, it is unusually tall, and the smallest five-door car in the world. A compact nose and vertical taileate mean a larger cabin area than rivals, and accommodates four adequately. Seats fold flat completely, providing a bed-like facility.

Weighing under 15cwt, the Move powered by a 42bhp threecylinder 847cc engine which is quite adequate for spritely urban use, but the car is capable of 80mph on the open road. Combined fuel consumption is quoted as 47.1mpg with five-speed manual box and 39.8mpg with optional three-speed automatic. It will be launched at £7,200 and £8.200 according to equipment. Both prices include road tax.

Next will come the Cuore, an inch shorter and nearly 2cwt lighter than the Move, and costing well under £7,000. A true compact lightweight built for city use, it nonetheless boasts an advanced to-valve fourcylinder engine of 660cc producing 42bhp, It will be available from June in both three and five-door configu-

The following month comes the Terios, a new 12ft3in sport/urility with full-time four-wheel drive but without high/low gear ratios. Powered by the L3 Charade engine. it is essentially for road use, and more refined than the Fourtrak and Sportrak cult off-roaders. Though bound for the Japanese market too. the Terios launched at the Geneva Motor Show - more evidence of Daihatsu's European intents. Prices will span £12,000 to £14,800.

Also coming in July is Daihatsu's diminutive hot-shot - the threedoor Avanzato, a twin-cam turbocharged 4WD vesion of the Cuore delivering 64bhp, 0 to 60mph in 8.5 seconds and 100mph. With a specification to include air conditioning, it will cost around £9,000.

Wild one gets an extra wheel

art Jaguar, part Rover, and part guid-ed missile, Mick missile. Buckley's threewheeled motorcycle is powered by a VS engine that means he can match a Porsche 911 for speed.

Even the fastest motorcycles are rarely powered by engines bigger than 1,100cc, about the size of a small family hatchback's powerplant.

That was not enough for Buckley, who decided that despite his passion for classic two-wheeled machines, three wheels was much better for what he had in mind. If threewheeled transport conjures images of golf carts or Robin Reliants, then the Buckley V8 trike will change all that.

The inspiration for the character of the trike is Buckley's custom-built 93 cubic inch Harley-Davidson bike, but even Harleys struggle to get a look into the new craze for three-wheelers with grunt. Scottish comedian Billy Connolly toured Australia on a trike in his latest television travel series. But even his beast might struggle to keep up with the Buckley machine.

Buckley started with the engine and the notion that the trike should be as short as possible. Usually threewheeler motorcycles are powered by Volkswagen Bee-

part from being only half the size of the unit that Buckley Luses, they also have to be put at the back of the machine, making the steering very light.

But Buckley squeezes a 3.5litre V8 Rover engine, originally used in cars like the Rover Pn and still used today in hairy-chested sports cars like the TVR. into his trikes. Located in the conventional motorcycling position beneath the rider, the engine looks massively over-sized, but then everything about Buckley's trikes is larger than life. Instead of a manual gearbox, he uses the rear axle. transmission and four-speed automatic gearbox from a Jaguar. The engine and owertrain are litted into a hand-crafted chassis made from massively strong industrial tubing that makes the average piece of scaffolding look like a liquorice stick.

The result is a motorcycling behemoth that will go from standstill to 60mph in five seconds, and, for anyone whose passion for speed drastically outweighs their desire to live, will reach a theoretical top speed of 160mph. Since the trikes sell for £4,700, that represents almost unrivalled performance per pound. Buckley, who runs the Re-Cycles II motorcycle business in Brighton, says: "We build the trike to quite a tight specification. In fact they are massively over-engineered. You could put a bus engine into the chassis.

We do two basic models, the Stealth and the Predator.

Brighton trike-builder Mick Buckley with one of his creations: "It is easy to drive, you don't need any muscle, and it is fully automatic. We calculate it should reach 160mph, but that is not mandatory"

Handle with care: trike throttle is linked to a Rover V8 engine and Jaguar gearbox and we build them to order. They feel very safe, especially with the engine at the front, which means the front wheel never lifts off the ground. The steering is always direct and surprisingly light, and the stopping capability is terrific. "It is very easy to drive, you don't need any muscle, and it is fully automatic. They are very solid on the road and are immense fun. It has much the same acceleration as a Porsche 911, except you do have a windscreen on a 911. "Given that the trike delivers around 26 or 27mph for every 1,000rpm, we calculate it should have a top speed of loomph, but that is not mandatory. You do not have to go

The peculiar characteristics of the trike are reflected in the sort of equipment that goes with it. A tow-bar is one of the optional extras on offer, lap seatbelts are also offered and built-in stereos are planned. The trike's eccentric charac-

"I hadn't ridden for quite some time and know too many neople who have come off two wheels, largely, it must be said, due to thoughtless motorists and pedestrians. So a motorcycle with three wheels seemed a good idea. It is fun and it's different."

Bev's trike will have a petrol tank shaped as a beer barrel, and behind the driver will be a platform capable of taking either nine-gallon firkins of beer or passengers. Chairman of the Sussex Society of Licenced Victuallers, Bev also brews beer at his Hand-in-Hand pub and says: "I deliver beer to other pubs in a van but delivering it on the trike will be much more fun."

How did you first learn to

My family never owned a car. I started learning as a second Regiment when I was sta-tioned in Germany 40 years ago. My colonel sent me on a driving and maintenance instructor's course with the admonition that I was the least mechanically minded officer he had ever met, but I was the only one he could spare. Time before the course was tight. I had to have my driving licence to attend it. The regimental transport officer who took my test let me through despite the fact that I drove down a oneway street the wrong way.

Under the hammer: rare Benz gems

Mercedes-Benz 580K was the Mclaren FI of its day, but only this example was built before war broke out

model that played an important part in the early development of the automobile and provoked a row between two of the industry's pioneers, goes on sale today at the Mercedes-Benz Museum in Stuttgart.

The 1895 Roger Benz Velo is being sold by the museum after 30 years on display there. One of the later examples of its kind, it is being sold to make space for the museum's everchanging display, says Simon Kidston of the auctioneers. Brooks Europe.

The name Roger comes from Emile Roger, the French businessman who was the first customer for a Benz automobile, which arrived in four packing crates at the Panhard et Levassor engineering works in Paris on March 16 1888.

He soon acquired his own works and started assembling the cars from components to avoid import duty. But he sold these under his own name, claiming that patriotic Frenchmen resisted buying a car called Benz because of its obvious German origins. "Carl Benz never forgave him for this falsehood, yet it is arguable that without Roger.
